Since 1959, Dieruff has been the center of life to many teenage kids. It was the place where many children turned into mature young adults. Dieruff was a place where we learned, where we decided what we wanted to do in our futures, and where we planned our journeys in order to meet our goals.

If we wanted to accomplish something, this was the place to start. Inside the walls of Dieruff, people inspired us, gave us words of wisdom, and helped us overcome many of our obstacles. Dieruff was not just a place to learn, it was a place where kids hung-out, met new friends, and found special loved ones.

Dieruff was where we chanted "Husky Pride," a quality needed for participation in many clubs and activities, a quality ringing with dedication, commitment, and loyalty. Every team, whether academic or athletic, always strived to do its best, and this was our definition, Dieruff's definition, of success.

During our four years in high school we learned to consider college and learned about life through classes and activities such as peer mediation and adult living. Teachers, parents, and older friends encouraged us to plan for our futures, often reminding us of how close our futures really were. Was finally getting a driver's license really so far off, as many of us had believed at one time? Was the spring prom and graduation really "just around the corner" as many alumni before us had said? It was true... anxiously awaited events, as well as dreaded commitments, were approaching faster than expected for many of us. Life, and all it had to offer, was always Closer Than It Appeared.

Closer Bonds

Student Life? What life, some would say. At some point or another we all complained about our hectic schedules and our duties and responsibilities at school and at home. As we grew older and wiser we gained some responsibilities in exchange for some freedom from our parents' rule. Everyone started to hear common phrases such as, "You get to have the car, as long as you fill up the tank," or how about the all-time favorite, "Want money? Get a job," so off we went on the journey of becoming responsible young adults. Without asking parents we bought the latest style trend or that CD we were not allowed to buy, and it felt good because we could do whatever we wanted. Then the magic was over and we soon realized that for the rest of our lives we would have to look out for ourselves and not depend on anyone else, so we had to keep that source of income. The time came for us to set some serious goals and work to obtain them. Yet, between our busy school hours, sports practices, and part-time jobs, we all managed a way to live up the joyous part of being teens, ready to tear up the world with our youth. Catching the latest flick, gathering at the bowling alleys, hitting the local clubs, and, of course, sauntering the mall on Friday nights were some of the activities we all made part of our stress-free routine. The enjoyment of an outside student life made the week pass by a little faster and the weekend more enjoyable.

Slammin' improvements for a slammin' school...Dieruff continued to provide students and staff with new opportunities, new ideas, and most of all, new materials. Some of the new additions included desks, cafeteria tables, books, vans, and even garbage cans. All these things were added to help Dieruff be a cleaner and a safer environment.

What's New in the Ol' School

The improvements affected everyone, including our community. Dieruff celebrated its Second Annual Good Neighbors Breakfast. This activity was extravagant and was held in our gym. Approximately 150 patrons from all over the Lehigh Valley attended this event. Our superintendent, Dr. Diane Scott, lit up our stage with an outstanding power point presentation explaining the district's new "Closing the Gap" initiative.

Speaking of everyone, even our teachers got a piece of the pie. Many teachers attended Saturday in-services to learn the details of the new teaching project. Dieruff was fortunate to have such dedicated teachers who believed in the success of their students. Continuing with this enthusiasm, the Allentown School District was also proud to announce a Smaller Learning Communities Grant for $984,559, awarded to Allentown's academies.

A Japanese Welcome. Allentown was host to a group of Japanese educators, who traveled to the US to compare schools, policies, methods, and philosophies. The group visited Dieruff on October 19, 2000 and observed numerous American classes in action.

Everyone talked about how great the Husky Pride was at Dieruff. Spirit week was an incredible way to start the week of traditional Allen/Dieruff rivalry. The planning for this week started in September when our student council first convened. As a team effort, student council members created five different ideas, one for each day.

Monday, the hardest day of the week for students to roll out of bed, quickly became pajama day. Students wore PJ's that included flannel pants and T-shirts, even silk tops and bottoms. Some daring DHS students who were filled with pride even wore their Husky slippers to school. Teachers were also involved in showing the pride they had in Dieruff. Monday started the collection of money for Mr. Touchdown. Senior football players and senior girls paired off to collect money, half of which was donated to charity with the other half funding more activities sponsored by student council.

Scary masks, blood and weapons were not part of Tuesday's costume day at Dieruff. Students who were all decked out for Halloween came dressed to school as angels, dancers, Scooby-Doo, cats, and even a "Hershey Kiss." The student council had the day approved as long as students obeyed the strict rules set. Husky Halloween was a successful and enjoyable day.

Proud to be a member of the class of 2001, 2002, 2003, and 2004, students let their pride show. The senior class sold class T-shirts with a graduation year and paw print on it. Shirts were pre-ordered for all students for Wednesday's class pride day. Seniors were bold in red, juniors strutted their stuff in orange, in blue were the tenth graders, and the ninth graders were proud to wear grey. This was a great way to show the pride of the classes.

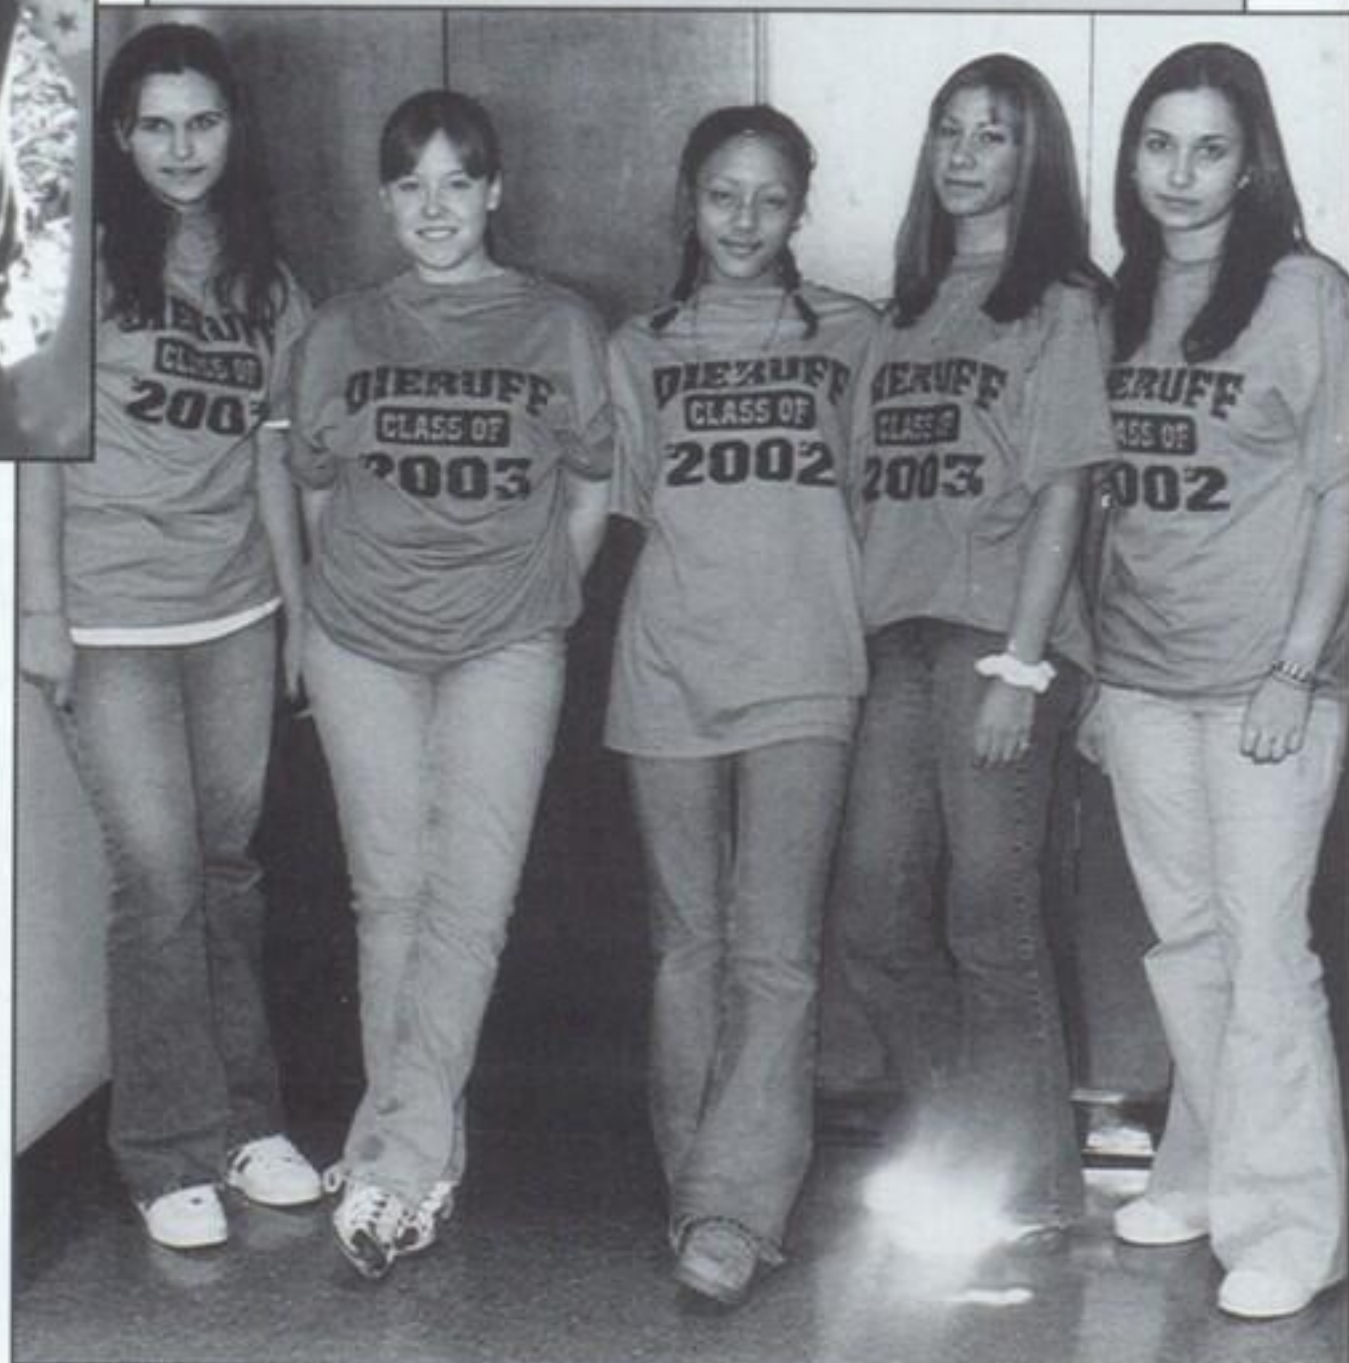

Dieruff High School was transported out of the year 2000 and into the 70's, grooving and moving in tune. Husky students wore 70's clothes which included bell bottoms, leisure suits, loafers, crunched shirts, tight jeans, peace signs, silver chains, bandannas, hair pieces and long straight hair for the girls. Teachers who loved the 70's dug deep into their closets and wore some cherished items for 70's day. Senior Greg Laird busted some disco moves in the cafeteria. "Bilal Williams dared me to dance for the cafeteria after I took my tray up. I thought I was going to get booed out of the cafe. It was great to get a positive reaction. I'd love to continue my cafeteria dancing career," commented Laird.

As the halls of DHS filled that morning, the aura around Husky students was indescribable. Students were dressed from head to toe in Husky or blue and gray attire. The sophomore class opened the Husky booth early enough for students to add glitter, nail polish or a bandanna for spirit. Students left class at 1:18 PM. and piled into the gym to show their pride to the school and to their team. The football team was welcomed with cheers and screams, the step team performed a routine, and our beloved Husky wrestled with the Allen Canary with pro-wrestler "The Love Bug" and "Martial Law" as refs.

"And, the winner is..." Mr. Betty Crocker winner of the cake contest were Seniors Denise Georges and Nick Miller, and Mr. Touchdown winners were Seniors Jodi Wasco and Dale Martrich. The football team was introduced as the best team in the Allentown School District and later that night we proved ourselves to be the best. Senior captains fired up the gym with encouraging and inspirational words to get fans to the game.

The air around the field chilled with November winds as the senior band members, cheerleaders, and football players took one last walk of pride. Seniors were honored at this game for all the dedication they put into their activity for the past four years. The "game of the century," which was televised on PCN, started with DHS being quickly scored upon and by halftime the score was 21-0. Dieruff needed to pull themselves out of this slump. DHS returned with twenty-eight unanswered points. Freshman Josh Hinkle, replacement quarterback, was awarded with the game MVP. The field filled with enthusiastic fans who were proud to be Huskies. That night will be one remembered by all, young and old.

Prom Night

The sky was flawless; the glistening stars cast a feeling of serenity and enchantment. There was a certain sense of magic in the air. It was the perfect night for the anticipated prom.

Most students did not know how much work was put into organizing a high school prom. Class officers were elected each year, by their peers, to make important decisions referring to the class, including the prom. Each class also had a class advisor to assist and guide them with important decisions.

One of the main focuses was fund-raising. The class was responsible for raising money for things like graduation, color senior portraits in the yearbook, and especially the prom. In the past, classes have raised money by having car washes, selling posters, candy, and TastyKakes, and organizing a talent show.

The development of the prom was very costly. Many things needed to be purchased, such as food, decorations, entertainment, and the rent of the location such as banquet halls, hotels, or country clubs.

The class officers and volunteers together made up the executive committee who met at least every other month and then more often throughout their senior year as prom and graduation drew closer.

By senior year, a prom committee was then formed by students who were devoted to the class throughout their years at Husky High. They decided on the prom colors, souvenirs, and themes, such as "The Royal Ball" and "Save the Best for Last," which were used in the past.

All the hard work always paid off and reflected on the unforgettable evening as it came to an end, with the memories forever engraved in the guests' minds and hearts. Each guest left with more than just materialistic souvenirs; everyone parted with long-to-be-cherished photos and remembrances.

Gradually Moving On

■ Graduation was always closer than it appeared

One of the biggest scholastic goals in every Husky students' life was to graduate from high school. Everyone looked forward to feeling the pride of marching down that aisle, moving the tassel to the left, and receiving his or her most cherished diploma.

In order to accomplish this goal, each student was obligated to earn at least 22.2 credits. Also, starting with the Class of 2001, students were required to successfully complete a high school graduation project and a computer literacy course.

One thing that many students worked towards was the privilege of sitting up on stage at graduation. Each student on stage needed to maintain a GPA of 3.5 or higher throughout their years at Husky High to receive this honor. The two students with the highest GPA, the valedictorian and the salutatorian, earned the honor of speaking about their Husky Pride and their high school experience during the ceremony. In addition to those speeches, the class president talked about the graduating class. Also, there may have been other guest speakers, such as an honored alumni, a school board member, or a retiring teacher.

In past years, the Dieruff graduation was held at Stabler Arena. The cost of renting the arena was substantial, and to pay for this, the diplomas, and the cap and gown, each graduating senior was required to pay class dues of $35. This was added to the senior class's treasury, which started at a balance of zero at the beginning of their freshmen year. The graduating females wore gray caps and gowns; the males wore blue. Each senior was allowed to keep their cap and gown.

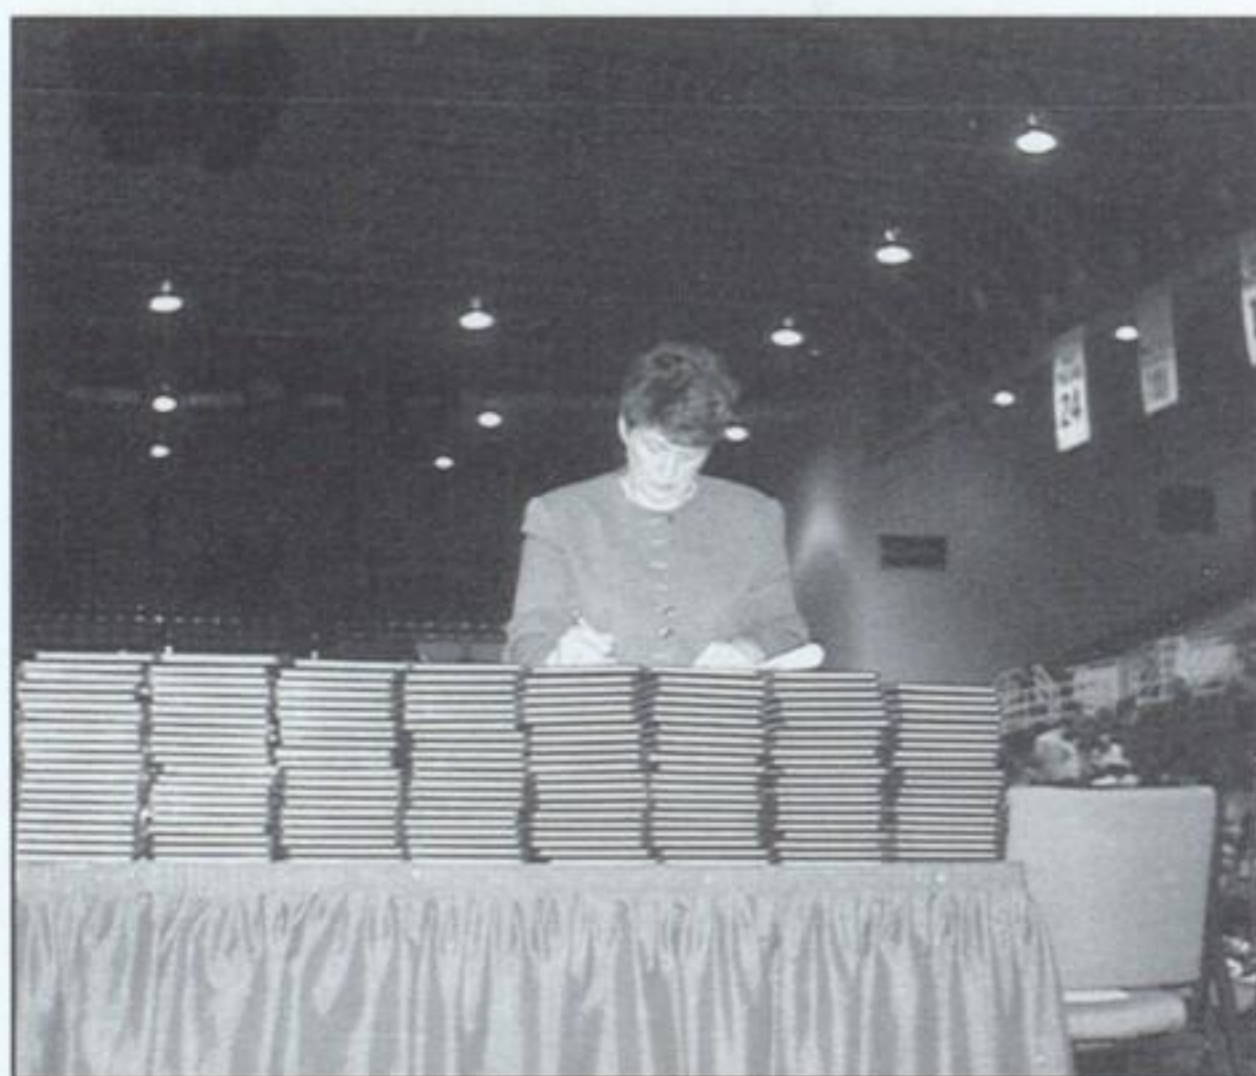

To accompany the graduates, the Husky choir sang the National Anthem and rehearsed songs while the band played the traditional graduation song, "Pomp and Circumstance" and our alma mater, "Blue and Gray." Sometimes a Dieruff soloist sang the national anthem.

Family, friends, and teachers were always welcome to share in this significant event which made it even more special for the graduates. Every Dieruff student looked forward to that day when he or she walked across the stage, a sign of attained success and intense pride.

If you thought dancing was easy, try to dance for thirty minutes nonstop, changing clothes every thirty seconds. That is exactly what four girls from Dieruff did in their spare time with the EXCEL Dance Company.

A local dance group, EXCEL Dance Company, had reached unimaginable heights. They danced in Disney World three straight years and annually at Hershey Park and Great Adventure. They also danced at Universal Studios in Florida, on the Big Red Boat, and in Port Lacy. The dancers reached stardom when they were asked to dance in Carnegie Hall in October of 1998. A week after they danced, the studio received a call from NAPAE. The company was asked to dance at the 2000 Olympics in Australia. The group was only one of twelve companies invited from the entire United States.

The group practiced every weekend, five to seven hours a day. These practices went on from the time they were invited to the night before they left. Even on the night before they left, the girls practiced from five till eleven o'clock. For the two previous years, the group was eating, sleeping, and breathing dance. Senior Nicole Longtin said, "This trip took a lot of time, hard work, and energy."

The time had finally come for the girls to take their long flight to Sydney in search for their gold medals....fame, opportunity, and recognition. The group got their chance to shine on the Samsung Stage, a stage located near an Olympic venue. "There were hundreds of people there to watch us dance, and they treated us like we were the Olympians," commented Junior Terry Stauffer.

While performing one of their eight shows, Freshman Holly Werkheiser injured her ankle. Like any true Olympian, she went on to dance. Holly commented, "Even with a hurt ankle I still had fun, and I did my best to keep the show rolling."

Senior Kim Bushner stated, "We were all burned out from the long practices, the plane ride, and performing our thirty minute show. As I look back though, I realize it was all worth it."

Ouch! Among many things, one of the newest crazes at Dieruff High was tattoos. Ignoring all warnings and cautions, many Dieruff students endured the pain of having a tattoo permanently branded on their skin. Junior Corey Chapkovich, who proudly wore a tattoo symbol which meant "swimmer," stated, "The most pain came after it was over. The healing process took some time."

Many Husky High students believed that tattoos were an art form. Sophomore Yoly Santana got her tattoo for just that reason. Yoly, who has a flower tattoo across her chest, quoted, "Tattoos are very addicting. You can't just get one."

Another tattoo lover, Senior Greg Laird, stated, "I love tattoos, and once you get one you gotta' get more!"

Then again, there were students who believed adamantly against permanently marking their bodies. "I will never go through the pain of getting a tattoo. It's just a scar for life," commented Junior Rosemary Pacheco.

The price of tattoos ranged from $20 to $600. Junior Wesley Rodriguez, who received his tattoo from Imperial Tattoo in Bethlehem, paid $140. Senior Princeton Ross, who has a tattoo of his cousin's name, spent $90. The prices of tattoos depended on the size and the colors used in the tattoo. In all tattoo salons, patrons had to be eighteen years of age or have a parental consent.

Was it art or was it a scar? Society's reaction towards tattoos was varied, and the younger generations, of course, seemed more open to the idea of such a permanent decision. Regardless, teens got tattoos for many different reasons, and many parents signed the consent form in support. Whether the tattoos were to remember a loved one, to fulfill a personal reason, or to exhibit the beauty of the artwork, tattoos remained very popular with Dieruff students.

Sophomore Tony Khouli did not have to travel far to meet this world-wide superstar. The Rock was a popular WWF wrestling star who was admired by all. He was a local hero, raised in Bethlehem and a graduate of Freedom High School. Khouli stated, "The Rock was extremely friendly. He acted like any other person you meet on a day-to-day basis." A touch of fame brought out a lot of excitement into the lives of many Dieruff students. Our Huskies encountered many heroic celebrities, famous personalities, and slam dunkin' superstars. Meeting President Clinton was a touch of fame for Senior Lindsay Myers. "It was an interesting experience to meet a man who has so much power," said Lindsay.

Imagine meeting a famous person unexpectedly. What questions would have run through your mind? The thought of meeting someone famous was most eventful and could have been an anxious moment.

Anytime, anywhere, a famous icon was always near a Dieruff Husky. Concerts, field trips, and public appearances were all opportunities to rub elbows with celebrities. Imagine how excited students felt when they had an encounter with a celebrity. Students became speechless, anxious, and shy while meeting a famous icon that they never dreamed of meeting in their lives. A few students grew butterflies in their stomachs' seconds before meeting a person who they never knew they would ever meet.

The experience of meeting famous people made students realize that celebrities were people too. Senior Melvin Perez met Spanish musician Tito Puentes at a wedding in Puerto Rico. Perez stated, "I just went up to him, said 'hello,' and told him I was his fan. He recently passed away, which is a big loss to Latin music. He was the number one timbatas player." Having an encounter with a celebrity put a sense of reality into the minds of Dieruff students. Conversations with the celebrities helped students learn more about them.

Just like regular people, celebrities made mistakes, had life-changing experiences, and on occasion, even had bad-hair days. Even though the celebrities might not have always remembered their encounters with Dieruff students, the photographs will always be a reminder of the great moments and the Huskies' touch with fame.

Tomorrow was our future, yesterday was our past, and somewhere in between we have become the best of friends. Commonly quoted between the two was "Friends Forever." Friendships came and went but these were the ones that stuck together. Thick and thin was a well known way to describe how these special friends lived their relationships. Ever since we all could remember, they were inseparable.

Seniors Tom Leauber and Zach Gottwald have been friends since before they could even remember. They have participated in typical boy activities in their free time. They vacationed together, rode bikes, and hung out at Rita's Italian Ice. Many friendships seemed to dwindle down to just acquaintances, but their friendship grew over the years, becoming more special with each passing memory. Friends were always someone to come to with any problem big or small.

Seniors Nate Brown and Greg Goletz have been close friends since they were three. Nate remembers playing kickball in their neighbor's yard. "Those kickball games could get pretty rowdy. I remember Greg arguing a lot about whether he was safe at first base or not!" Nate continued, "Greg just likes to challenge people."

Huskies knew the value of endearing friendships, friendships that lasted through the years. Senior O'Neill Alvarez's story was not typical. Alvarez, who moved to Allentown from NYC in 1999, really believed a good friend of his once actually saved his life. Alvarez stated, "A friend and I were in the subway and my pants got too close to the third rail. My pants actually caught on fire, and my friend, Joel, helped me hit my pants. We put it out together. He didn't panic; he went to work."

Friendships did not always last, but great memories did, and those relationships that survived the years were certainly the most cherished. Whether a new friend or a cherished old friend, Dieruff teens knew how to stick together.

Let the Games Begin.

Sophomore Chris Sandt and Junior Eric Laviendier find time to enjoy a game of Magic in the main office lobby. Finding time to play with other students was tough since most teachers did not allow cards in class. Still, many Huskies found time to play in study halls or in the cafeteria. Many teens could always find somewhere or someone to play, wherever they went, and more often than not it was with someone new.

"The reason I enjoy playing Magic is it keeps you thinking. [Magic] is about strategy, planning your attacks and defenses. Not many players can learn every strategy. I am 17 years old and I still have a rough time remembering many of them."

Senior Nicholas DiBucci

Editor: Jerome Yost

What would your mind have conjured if someone had told you in 2000-2001 many Dieruff students enjoyed Magic as a hobby? You would probably imagine visions of tigers jumping through hoops of fire and ladies being sawed in half. But, you would have been wrong. Magic was also the name of a card game made by Wizards of the Coast located in Renton, Washington and enjoyed by many students.

The object of the game was to cast magical spells and summon creatures to reduce the opponent's life from 20 to 0, before one's opponent did the same. Many times, a game would last about 25-30 minutes.

Magic was enjoyed by many students because of its uniqueness to traditional card games like poker or bridge. Magic games were seldom the same and there was a level of strategy involved unlike any other game. With each turn players had only a certain amount of resources to employ. Players had to ask themselves every turn whether to play creatures to help their position or use spells like Dark Banishing to destroy their opponent's creatures to ensure safety from an opponent's attack.

Many teens also enjoyed Magic because of the neat extras it offered to people who just collected the cards; so, even if teens did not understand or enjoy the game, they could still have use for the cards. Senior Sean Day commented, "A card worth 50 cents can be worth a whole lot more in the future. That is the best thing about collecting." For example, on every card there was an expansion symbol to tell players which set it was from, which was very important to collectors since it made organizing cards a snap. Each expansion symbol was colored to show how rare the card was. Each card also included a collector number in the collection.

Junior Thomas Headley stated, "Magic is awesome because of all the illustrations and flavor text." Flavor text was a little morsel of literature on the bottom of the card. It usually was an excerpt from the novel that corresponded to the expansion; one recent example was the novel Nemesis. Many older cards, though, had quotes from Shakespeare and Samuel Coleridge. The text helped to explain the picture or the character's history.

Still, the greatest thing about Magic was the ability to connect with someone new and immediately share a common interest. Many students at Dieruff High met other players at the Encounter store on Union Boulevard. Junior Mike Kadas stated, "Magic gets you out there meeting different types of people, which is a good experience."

With no shortages of players or places to play, Magic was expected to continue to be a popular and challenging hobby among students.

Historical Landmark.

Known for its historic origins, Allentown's King George Inn was also well-known for its ghostly stories. Located very near Dorney Park and Wild Water Kingdom, the restaurant and bar remained popular among Lehigh Valley natives. Learning more of the inn's history was often a conversation shared over a delicious dinner.

"I believe in ghosts because there is life after death. There has to be somewhere to go after you die."

Junior
Shawn Kiefer

Do You Believe in Ghosts?

"No, I don't believe in ghosts, but I love to read Stephen King." Mrs. Coleman

"Yes, I believe in ghosts. If one person dies without completing a mission or important goal in life, his spirit will stay until he's completed it." Shaza Toumeh

"Yes, I saw one once at a cemetery in Poland. It was a white hand coming out of a tombstone." Sylvia Halat

"It's a total mystery with what happens to people after they die. It freaks me out when I think about a ghost watching me or just being near me. The movie The Sixth Sense definitely fueled my beliefs in ghosts and spirits." Nolan Zambelli

Staff Writer: Crystal Schaffer

"I see dead people." Sound familiar? Like the boy in The Sixth Sense, many firm ghost believers have seen dead people. Others thought it was all in the imagination.

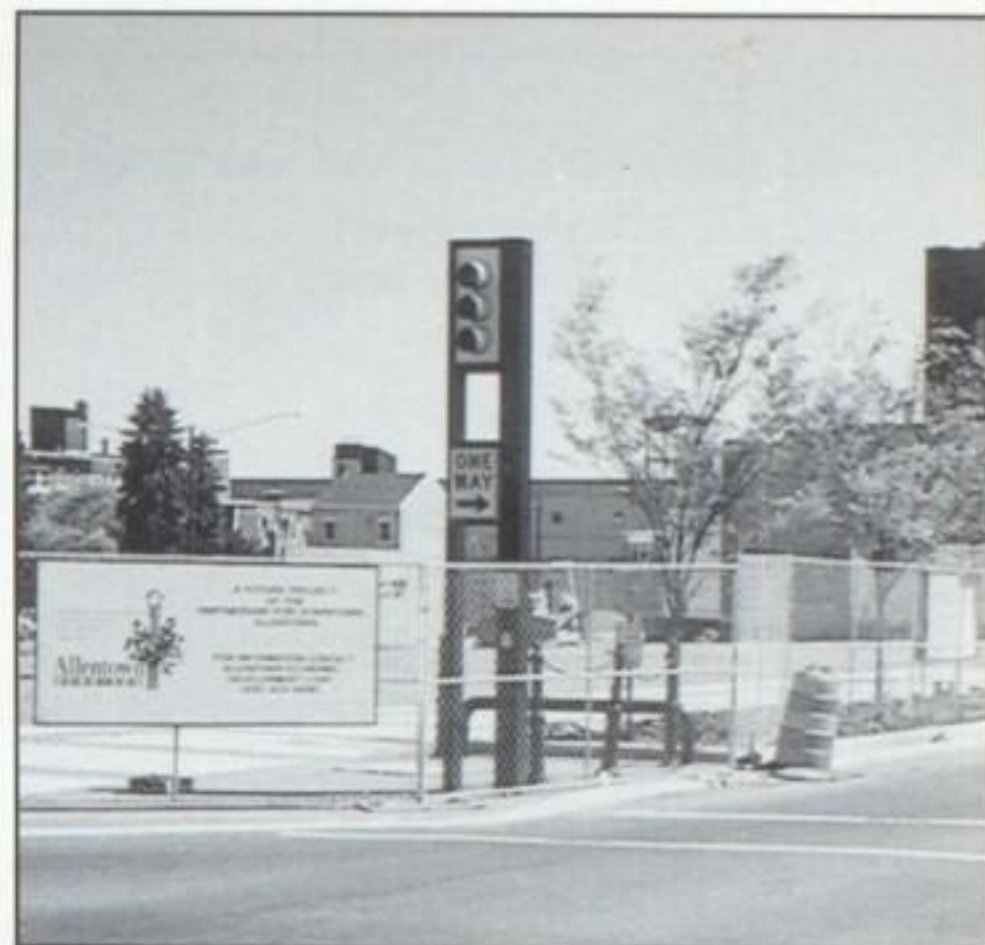

Many students held jobs at Dorney Park and were probably familiar with the King George Inn on Hamilton Boulevard. The story of the inn goes back as far as World War Two, when a woman went into the basement to hang linens to dry. According to Charles J. Adams' book, Ghost Stories of the Lehigh Valley, the woman was held under the spell of an unseen force. After a couple of hours, crew people finally discovered her in the dark basement, hysterical. "She told them she had heard the sound of a baby crying, coming from the old well which was in the middle of the basement," said Cliff McDermott, former owner of the inn. Since then the downstairs had been cleaned up and completely restored. Nobody brought up the woman's story until the employees remembered what happened in 1776, during the local Indian uprisings. Indians were rumored to swoop down into the valleys, throwing dead babies down the wells. Employees of the King George Inn claimed to have heard the muffled sounds of an infant crying.

In 1993 a psychic came to investigate the inn. According to Adams she proclaimed the presence of ghostly energy and saw a woman in an eighteenth century dress holding a small child in a hallway. She told the psychic that there were gold coins in the wall, but nobody has ever tried looking for them.

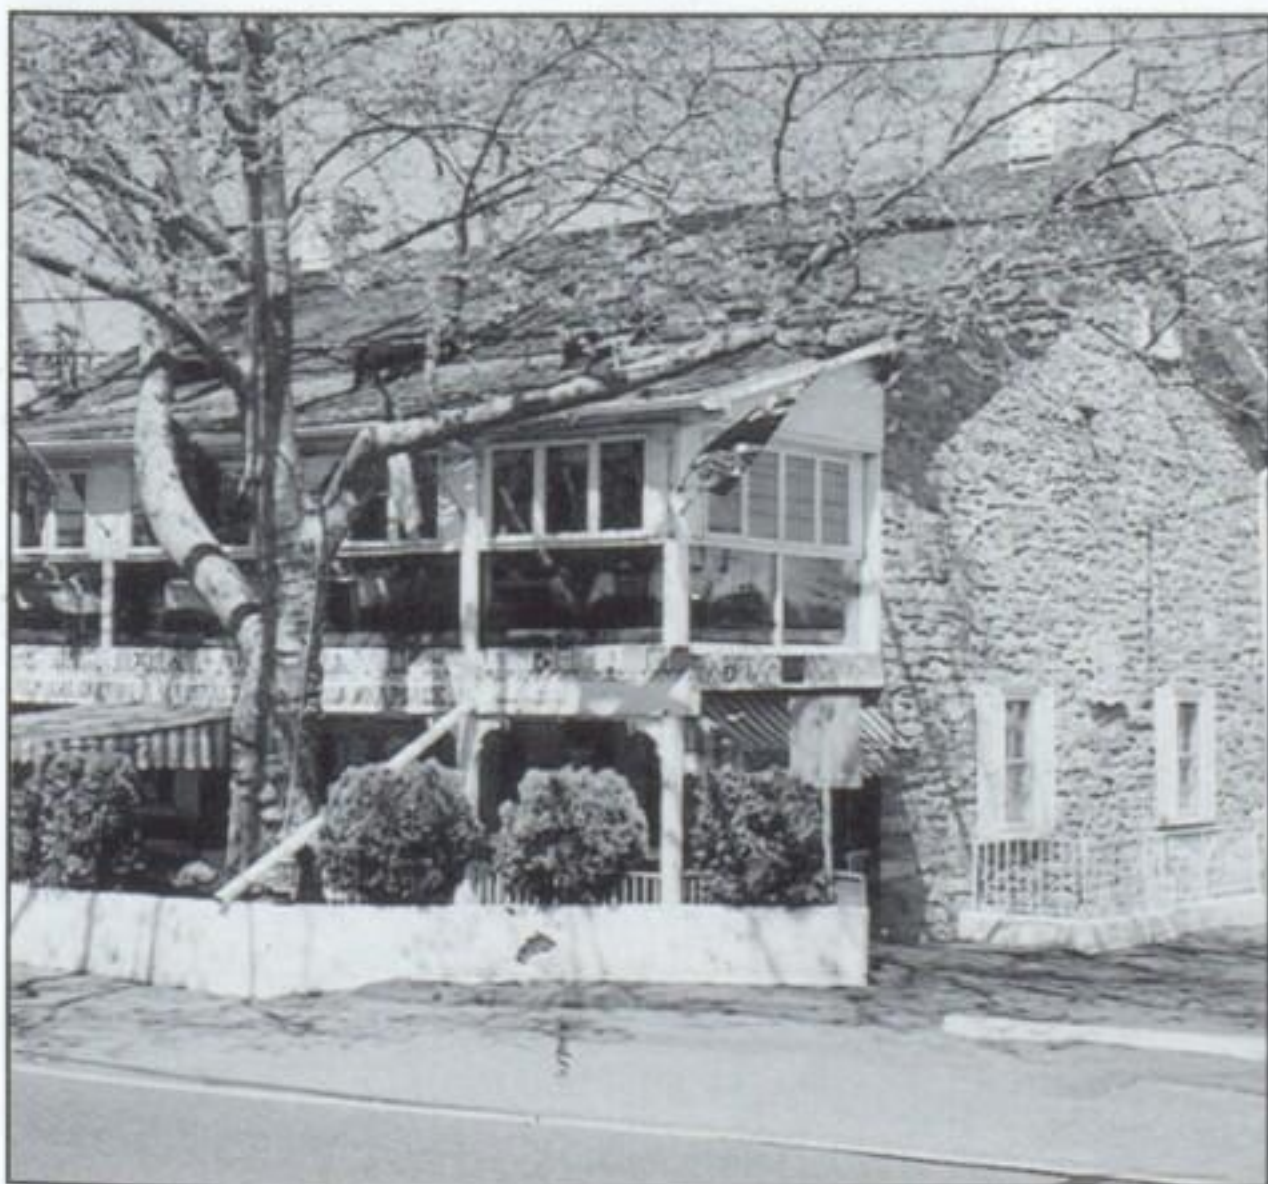

Another Allentown claim to seeing dead people took place near the many shops that lined downtown Hamilton Street. Around what used to be Hess's Department Store, there supposedly walked the ghost of a young woman. An Allentown police officer, who wished to remain anonymous, said the ghostly figure was that of a girl who was struck and killed by a car many years ago. He stated he had seen the figure late at night, on the curb, staring blankly into the street on which she died.

Allentown seemed to have had its share of "ghostly" sightings with claims of "seeing dead people," and many were anxious to be the next witness.

Haunted Street.
Rumors around A-town included the haunting of Hamilton Street. Supposedly, the ghost of a young woman called this area her home.

Stand By Me. Senior brothers Mani and Abdiel "Aldi" Panell meet each other outside after school. They agree that having siblings in the same school has its good and bad points.

Mani commented, "My brother is one of my closest friends. Having him in school is a good thing. It gives me someone to talk to and hang out with."

"We give each other space. If we would try to be together twenty-four seven, one of us would get on the other's nerves," Abdiel said of his relationship with his brother.

Is That MY Jacket? Sisters Siobhan Aponte (Sophomore) and Dorinda Aponte (Freshman) take time out of their busy schedules to see how each other's school day is going.

Editor: Danielle Russell

There were a lot of siblings roaming the halls of Dieruff High. Some siblings thought it was great to have someone they knew so well in the same school. Younger siblings enjoyed having a brother or sister who already knew the school and who could show them around. Simon Tabchi in ninth grade had this to say about what he liked about having his sister Resam in twelfth grade at Dieruff with him, "An advantage is that you know someone is there to help."

Also, underclassmen could turn to their older sibling(s) for help with homework and problems they may have been having. Some liked that they knew upperclassmen and that they had a ride to and from school from their older sibling. Sophomore Adanah Sampson said, "My sister Isha has a car, so we can get a ride here."

Although there were many younger siblings who loved having their big brother or sister in the same school, there were some who did not think it was so great. About her older sister Jen in twelfth grade, Erin Doyle in ninth grade stated, "I have to see her in the halls- I see her enough at home."

Others did not like that they could check up on them or embarrass them in front of their friends. Diana Melendez in ninth grade said this about her sister

Sharlene in tenth grade, "She can spy on me or follow me around or embarrass me in front of my friends."

Some did not like being compared to their older sibling. Emily Brown in ninth grade said this about being compared to her older brother Nate in twelfth grade, "Everyone asks me if I'm Nate Brown's little sister and if I'm as good of a student as he."

On the other side, there were a lot of older siblings and twins or triplets who liked having younger or same-aged siblings in the same school. Freshman Maya Aoun said this about her sister Diana who was in twelfth grade brother Danny, who was in ninth grade, "It's fun to have classes with them. We can help each other out."

Geraldine Ojeil in eleventh grade had this to say about why she liked that her brother Patrick in ninth grade was in the same school, "If I missed school, he was able to get my homework and I didn't feel as alone anymore."

Dieruff students related they didn't like the pressure to take care of their younger sibling(s). Hasna Saoud in twelfth grade said this about her younger sister Silvia in ninth grade, "She has a zero period, so I had to do the same thing so I can take her to school with me."

Dieruff students had mixed feelings about their siblings attending the same school. But, overall they all agreed that their brothers and sisters were not all that bad!

Popping Out in the New Millenium with Our Fashion

The fashion industry was constantly changing, and its changes at Dieruff were very evident. There seemed to be a new fashion trend with every new school year. Some of them, for example, were sporty, preppy, and casual. Senior Rachael Alston commented, "I mostly dress in preppy and casual clothing. It is what I feel most comfortable in."

Bells and little shirts may have been a big thing for girls, and the next year it may have been big baggy jeans and baggy tee-shirts. Fashion styles and preferences changed constantly and quickly.

Over the years many old trends became new again. Some examples included bell bottoms, pedal pushers, and tie-died shirts. These all first became popular in the 1970's but became popular again at the turn of the new millennium. Senior Lindsay Myers commented, "I wear all of these trends that have come back again. And, the large bells are my absolute favorite."

Besides the flashbacks from the seventies, other well known wardrobe items were big, baggy, bright and colored jeans, pants, and hooded tops. Many of these pieces had bold colored stripes. Kayley Carwell, freshman, stated, "I wear colored things because it lets me be seen. More people notice you when you wear bright colors."

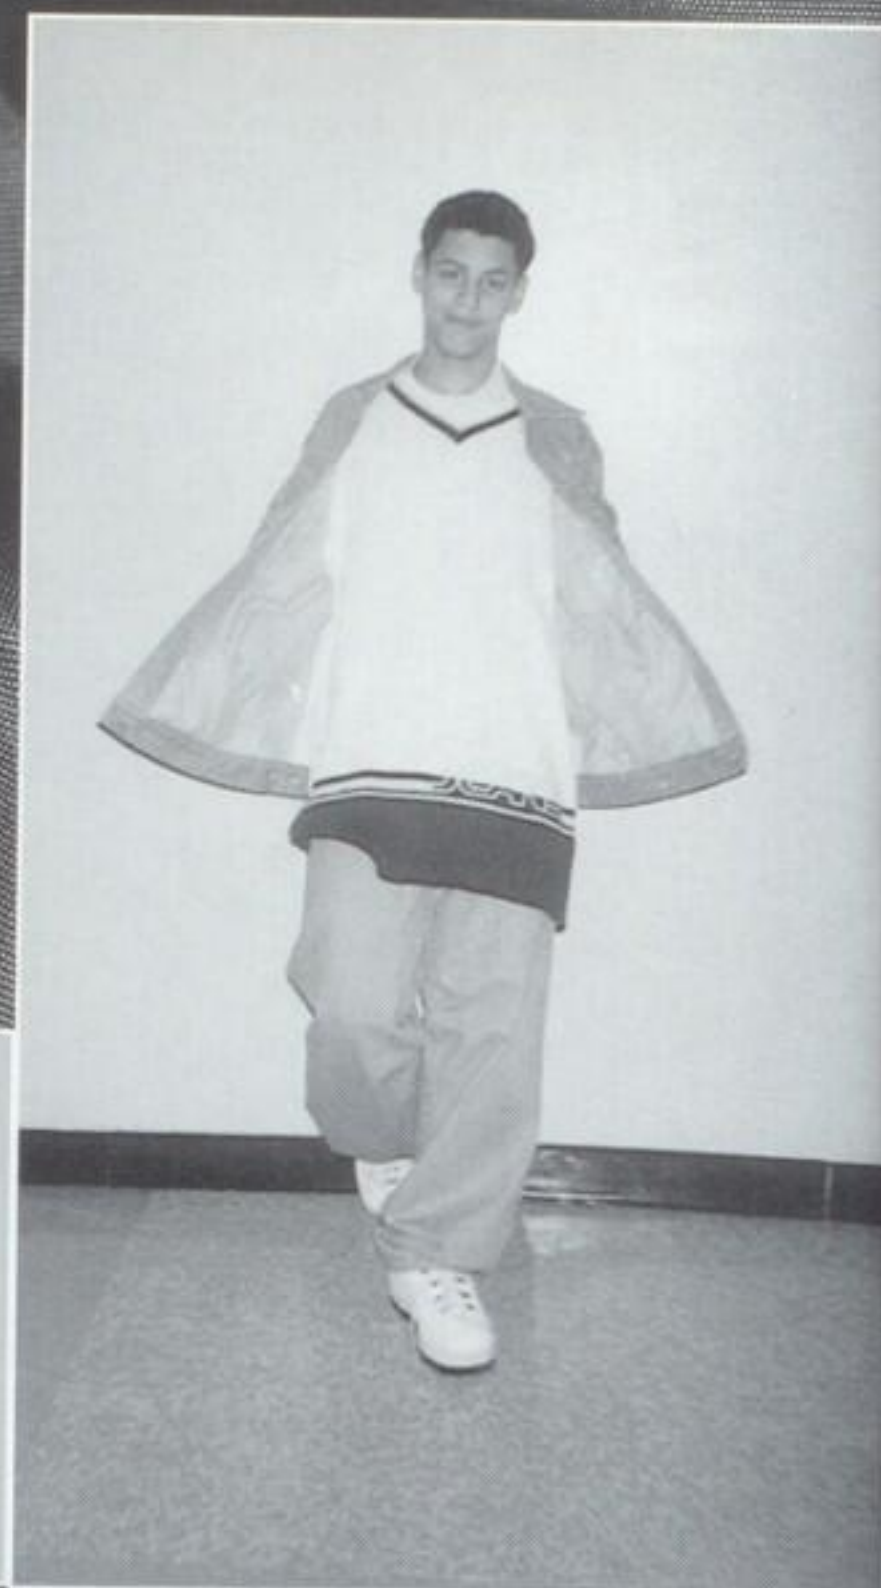

Vests were another big attraction for guys and girls. They were usually worn over tee-shirts or "baby-doll tees."

Girls were getting more than just their ears pierced in the new millennium. Studs and hoops adorned belly buttons, tongues, and many other unseen and unusual places.

Hairstyles varied for both girls and boys with the individual. Extensions became popular within some groups of females. Fades, shape-ups, and shaved heads were among some of the guys' favorites. Dreadlocks, twists and afros also made a comeback.

Each individual strived to achieve his own unique look in order to avoid being in anyone's shadow. This was only one way DHS students expressed their own individuality.

Senior year for students at Dieruff not only meant their last pep-rally, Allen/Dieruff football game, or Snowball, but also the last chance to really spend quality time with their favorite teachers and best friends.

The graduating class of 2001 spent their senior year preparing for SATS, filling out college applications, answering interview questions, and of course planning for the prom.

Even though it was an end to one of the most important times in their lives, Husky seniors looked at it as an important transition to higher education and aspirations.

Senior year and all it encompassed was something we all looked forward to from the first day of kindergarten. It really was closer than it always seemed to appear.

But, now that it was finally over, what did we have to look back on? One thing was for sure; we had enough memories to last a lifetime.

MOST HUSKY PRIDE

"I take pride in my school and everything I do for it," stated Patti Harvey. Kiska, her teammates, and DHS were among the things that inspired Patti to have absolute Husky Pride. "Blue and Gray means having pride in my school, teammates, sports, and supporting them 100%," Patti continued. Husky Pride in her own words is... "Taking pride in our school, ourselves, our teammates and always being proud, no matter the outcome."

Senior Stand-Out winner Chad Werkheiser said, "I've been involved with Husky sports since I was 5." Chad takes pride in his school and in all his sports. Chad continued, "Blue and Gray means having pride and living on the East Side. Husky Pride means something you feel on the inside and not just words. You have to have pride to know what pride is."

"Athletics are always a challenge with plenty of excitement," stated Princeton Ross, winner of Most Athletic. Princeton participated in football, basketball, and track. Ross also considered playing for college after graduating from high school while pursuing a career in teaching. His talent came naturally to him, and he humbly believed he possessed both the body and the mind to play athletics all his life.

Basketball, field hockey, track, and softball taught Lindsay Meyers to play hard and with fierce determination. "I've worked very hard to maintain my athletic ability," commented Meyers, who grew up watching her older brothers play sports. "They made me want to be tougher as a female athlete," stated Lindsay.

MOST LIKELY TO SUCCEED

Senior winner Danny Fuller said he was probably voted Most Likely to Succeed because he tried to do the best to his ability. "As far back as I can remember, I have been self-driven." Fuller also added, "I'd like to succeed for the same reasons as everyone else: to show off that college paid off, to be content in my job, to live comfortably, and to a lesser extent, earn money, among other things."

Nancy Atiyeh was known as a girl who took her school work very seriously, especially with the goals she had. Her future plans included attending college to become a lawyer, teacher, or nurse. Stand-Out winner Mike Nino was constantly being recognized for his artistic talent. He had been drawing ever since the first grade. Nino won various art awards through his school years which encouraged him to want to keep drawing. "If you want to be good at art, practice is the key thing," stated Mike, who also believed that being artistic was a good way to pick up girls.

"I like to draw and I think my paintings showed it last year," commented winner Jen Doyle. Doyle received an Art Ovation Award for her drawings. She was inspired by her elementary art teacher and her father to draw ever since she was five. Some of her masterpieces were displayed in the ASD calendar and at LCCC. "I think the reason why I was voted Nicest Smile was because my smile is contagious," joked Bilal Williams. He constantly found people looking at his smile. BEST DRESSED

"Class and originality," were the keys to Danny Colon's successful style. This Senior Stand-Out winner's regular dress day was jeans and a flannel with Tims. It took him about ten minutes to pick out his outfits in the morning. Colon bought many of his clothes on Jamaica Avenue in Queens, New York. "You will never see me in sweat pants and a T-shirt because I respect my style of dressing."

"Don't dress to impress," was Rachael Alston's fashion statement, upon learning she was voted Best Dressed. She made her own mark by blending the newest fashions with her own. Going to the mall was not an everyday thing for Rachael. She mostly shopped in spurts. Rachael shopped at a variety of stores such as Learner NY, Macy's, and Wet Seal, just to name a few.

"I don't know why I won. Actually, I'm just very friendly," confessed Steph Riga, Senior Stand-out winner who learned her friendly style through her mother, and has been good with people since she was a cute little baby. Flirting seemed to get Riga her own way. Free food and soda were just a few fringe benefits she received for flirting. "I don't flirt. I'm just a people person," she stated.

"I love to flirt. It's a fun thing to do no matter who you are with or where you are at," stated Nolan Zambelli, who was not surprised at all to have won. This boy-toy did not always believe flirting was the only answer. In fact, he would have rathered to be in a relationship. "Flirting is exciting and fun, but nothing tops being with someone you truly care for and love spending time with," commented Nolan.

MOST LIKELY TO DO CRAZY THINGS

"Ecstatic," was the word Mike Buckallew used when describing his feelings over winning Most Likely To Do Crazy Things. "I was trying to win this award for the last four years!" One of the things that Mike considered crazy was once kissing a girl who he did not even know at the Lehigh Valley Mall. "Sometimes I guess I just have no common sense," admitted Mike.

Female winner Nouhad Alchahal was never afraid to do crazy things. She commented, "Everyone should be themselves, or no one is comfortable." Her theater background taught her not to be scared in front of people. Although Nouhad's adventures sometimes resulted in consequences she would have rather avoided, she stated, "It was all worth it!"

When the senior class had to think of a funny guy, who did they think of? Tommy Leauber, who was actually surprised to win. He believed he received his goofiness from his father. But, being funny sometimes came with consequences. When asked if he ever got into any trouble during any of his classes, Leauber stated, "I used to, but now the teachers seem to put up with my antics."

Jessica Gehman seemed a little surprised about winning. She was told by her friends and family she was a "smart-alec" ever since she was little. The funniest thing she had ever done in class was when she brought in a toy that made bubbling gas noises, and she made it sound like her teacher was the guilty party. "It's too hard to be serious all the time," added Jessica.

BEST PERSONALITY

"I was happy to hear my name as Best Personality, because I can look back and see my picture as a Senior Stand-Out," stated Christian Ortiz. Ortiz did not expect to win, but it "felt good" he admitted. Ortiz also modestly announced, "I think my personality is a definition of what a personality should be." He believed a good personality included an ease in making new friends while talking respectfully to others.

Lisa Plessl, winner of female Best Personality, was very surprised to have won. She admitted to having had strong competition. "I inherited some of my traits from my father," continued Plessl. "I try to worry about other people and not myself as much. I don't judge people by first appearances, and if someone has a bad day, I always try to make them smile," quoted Lisa.

MOST CHANGED

Senior Stand-Out Alice Takla was actually shocked she won, because in her opinion she has not changed over the years. "I'm still the same person, even though my appearance has changed. Some of the drastic changes believed by her peers were her different wardrobe, her make-up style, and her taste in music. "I dress more sporty and listen to alternative music now. I guess I am not as shy as I used to be, and now I am a bit more outgoing."

From a skater to a prep, to a mix of both, were a bit of Jon Crone's style metamorphosis. His taste for sports also changed. Jon went from enjoying wrestling to skateboarding. "It's very relaxing, and plus I enjoy it. My attitude changed also. I was a bit more wild, and now I concentrate more on school. I guess I just mellowed out," stated Crone.

BEST COUPLE

Arylis Hernandez and Zach Gottwald, winners of Best Couple, had been together for a year and five months as of October 2000. For fun they hung out together a couple times a week and watched movies or chilled with friends. "I think we get along so well because we always give each other space, and we have a lot of trust in our relationship," stated senior Zach Gottwald.

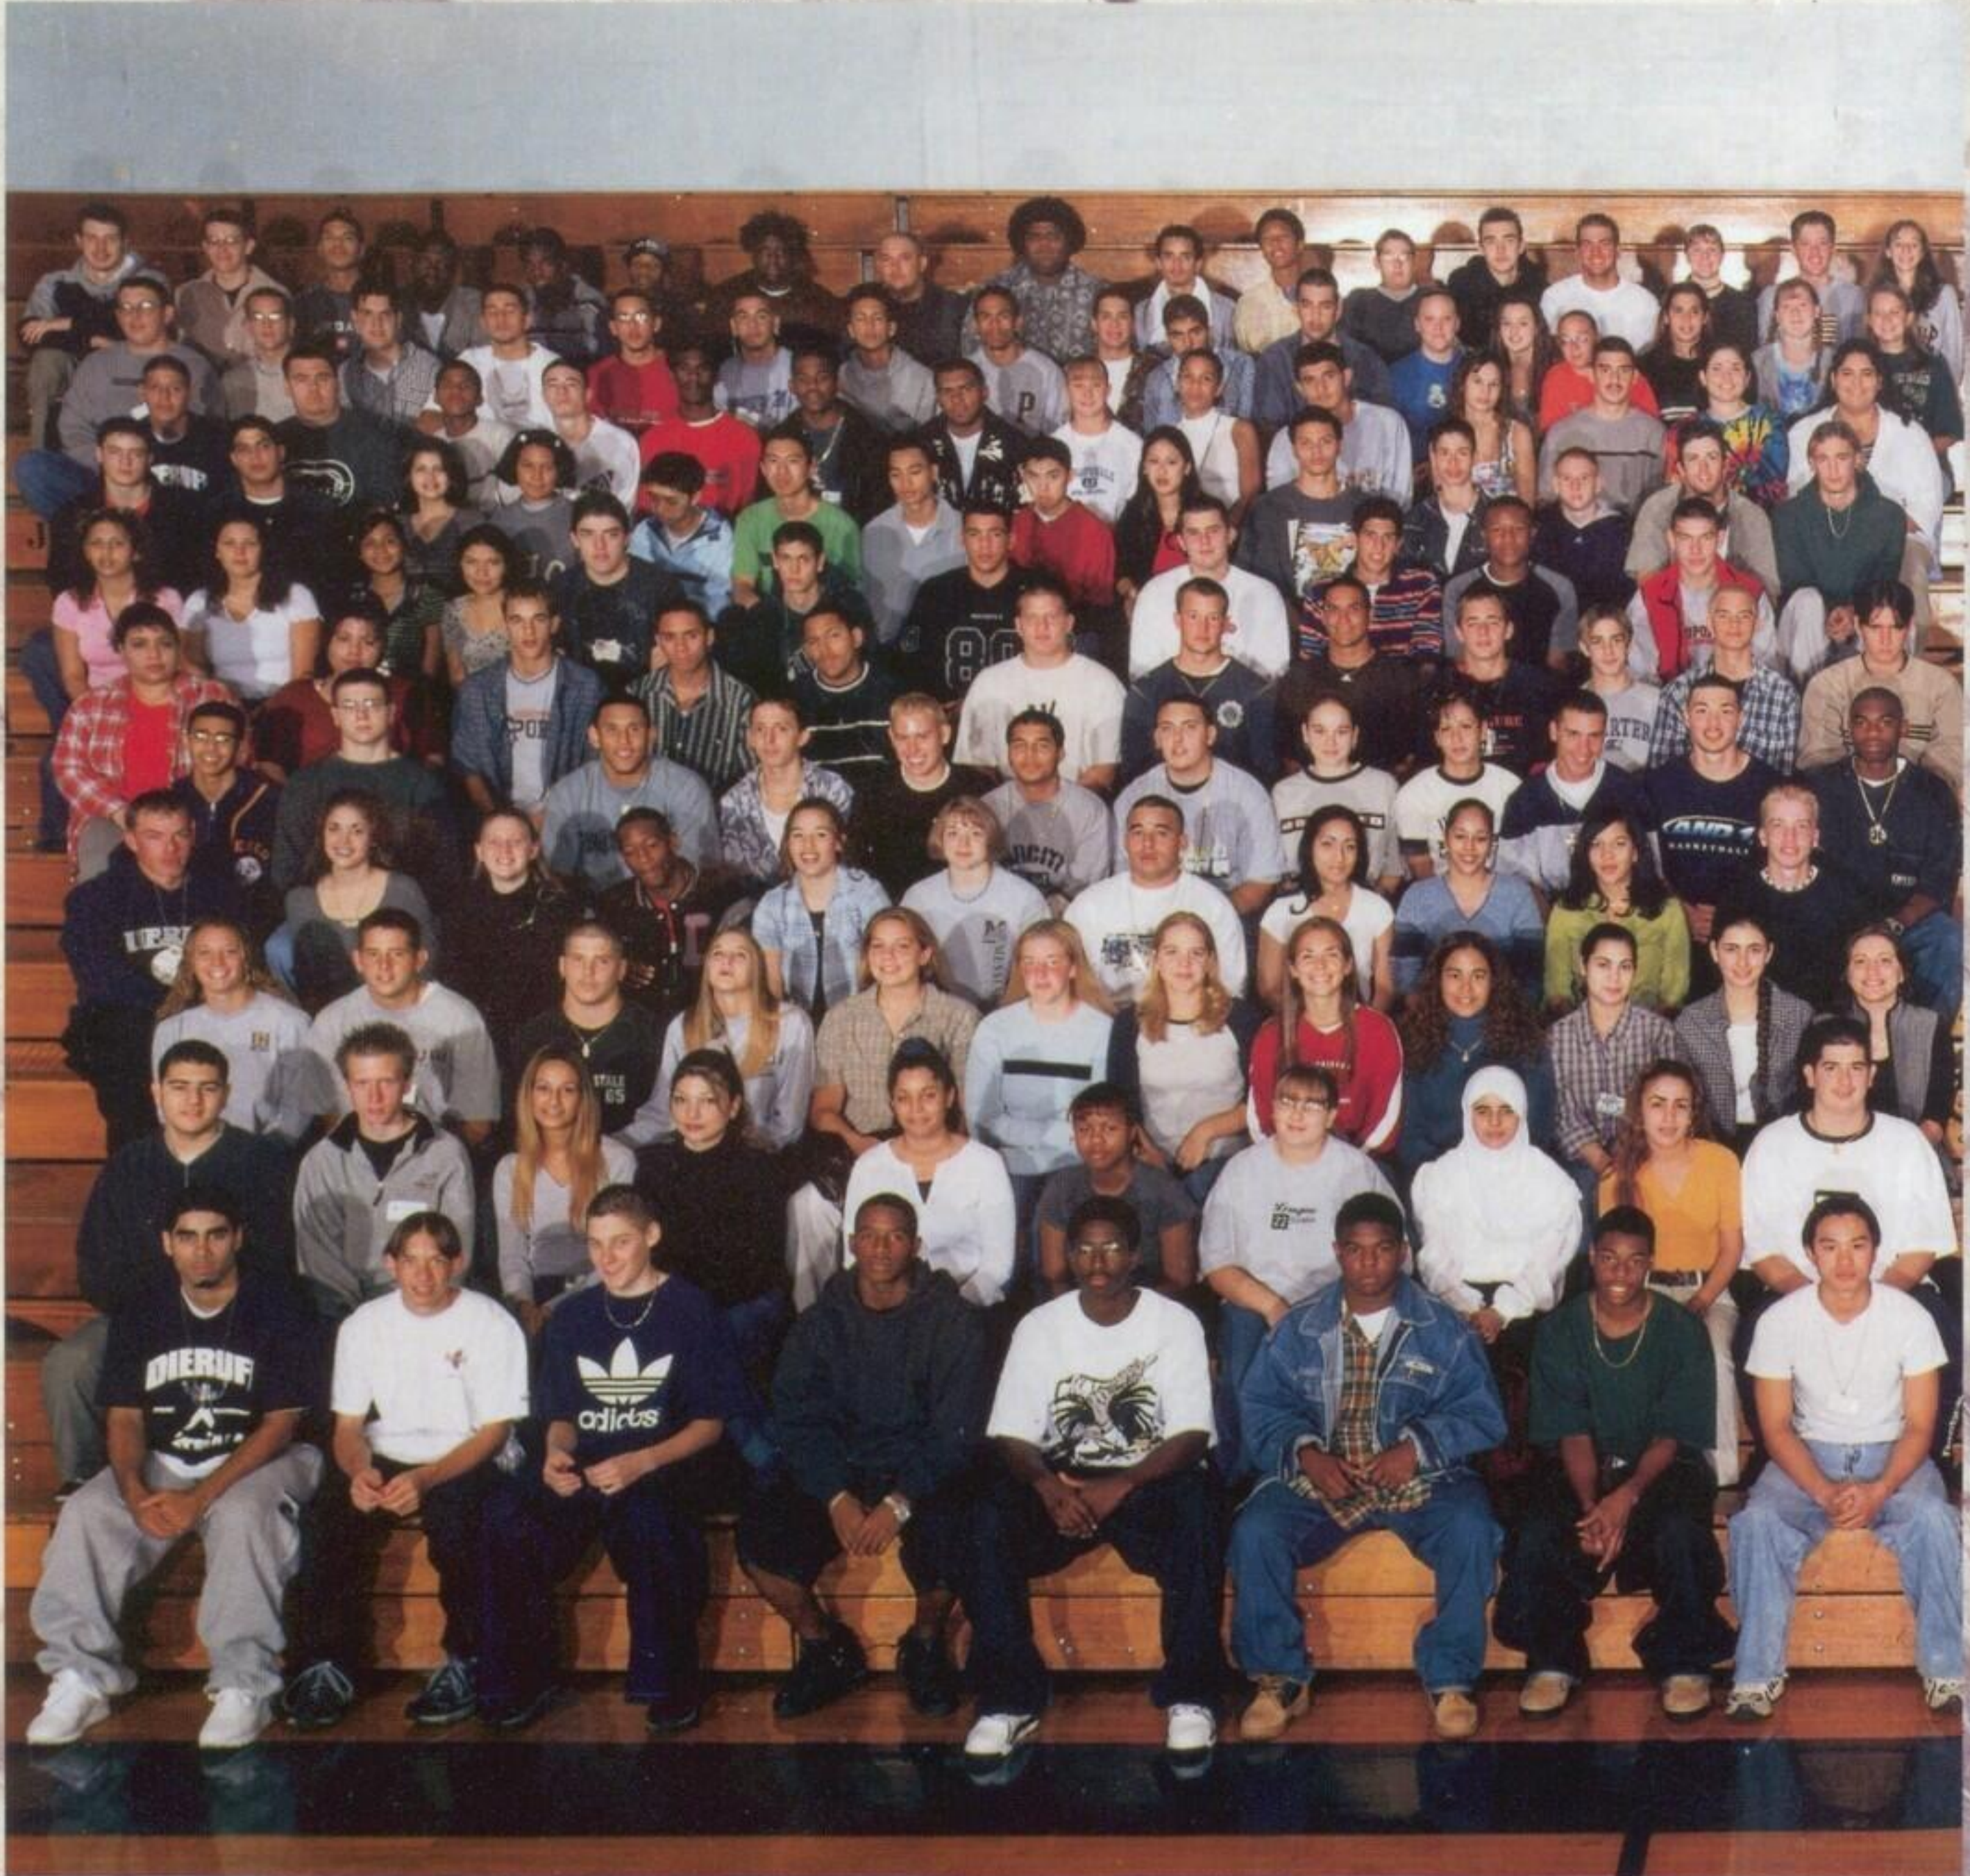

They always found something fun to do together. They liked the same music and they had the same views on a variety of subjects.

Both Arylis and Zach agreed that they were very good friends as well, and they hoped to stay that way no matter what happened. They planned to go to college together and maybe some day get married and have a family.

Nature Holds its Place at Dieruff. Juniors Debbie Lopez and LaToya Spence take advantage of the scenery outside the building. Landscaping at DHS was continually maintained and improved, giving our school an appealing look.

Dieruff High School underwent many changes each year, with 2000-01 being no exception. The incoming freshmen class size had exceeded any number of the previous classes. Numbers rose well into the six hundreds. A safety feature was added to the hallways. Each student was given a free lock to be placed on his/her locker. All locks had to be returned at the end of the year.

Unlike many other schools in the Lehigh Valley, Dieruff was a melting pot of people. This diverse makeup helped prepare Huskies for the real world.

Husky High continued to thrive for perfection with the new mandate of a senior project. Written and oral presentations were required by potential graduates in order to receive the coveted diploma.

Even though Dieruff appeared different with new faces of students and teachers, it still remained good old Husky High, a school closer to reality.

It's a Girl Thang!

Staff Writer: Lisa Azar

"I like reading Seventeen. My favorite part is the stories in the back about embarrassing moments. It could happen to anyone. The best one is where the girl falls off the stage!"

Jennifer Suarez
Freshman

Teenage girls all over the world went crazy when they saw their favorite actor or actress, ultimate boy bands, or music star on the front of their favorite magazines. Some of the more popular mags were Teen, Teen People, YM, Twist and Seventeen. Not only did these magazines have pictures of hunky guys and girl celebs, but they were informative on different types of teen issues, such as love, relationships, school, and dealing with parents.

Heather Yocum stated, "When I have a personal problem going on in my life, and I don't feel comfortable telling my parents, I write to one of the magazines. They give helpful information on how to solve it."

These magazines tried to answer everyone's questions in upcoming issues. Teenagers could also send e-mail to the staff people willing to write back. Senior Steve Barber said, "I thought these magazines are only for girls, but guys can get information out of them, too."

Fashion was a big thing to girls. These magazines had the latest, hippest, and trendiest fashions. Senior Nicole Al-amm quoted, "I always go to Teen magazine because it has pictures of hot clothes and accessories that I want to buy."

They also had different types of fun quizzes to take. Some examples included, "Are You a Love Addict?," "Are You a Beauty Junkie?," "Are Your Friends Bringing You Down?," and "How Focused Are You?" Beauty tips, confidence boosters, types of exercises, and dieting tips were also popular in current issues. Waad Hadid stated, "Reading these magazines are essential to many people's lives, both physically and mentally."

Magazines were not expensive. The cost ranged from $2.99 to $3.99, and teens could either subscribe to the magazine or just buy it off the rack. Many teenagers liked to buy it off the shelves in various stores. Senior Resam Tabchi said, "I like to go to any store that carries popular magazines. This way I get to look through them and see which magazine I like best."

So, whether you're having a bad hair day or needed advice on snatching your crush, these magazines were the place to go for good advice.

People Reading about People. (l to r) Juniors Kim Nguyen, Christina Mejas, and Shaza Toumeh get their daily dose of scoop by reading TeenPeople.

"In a word, the Playstation2 can be defined as 'Awesome!'" exclaimed Junior Erick Lavandier. PS2 became the ultimate entertainment system. Not only could the system play Playstation2 games, but it was also equipped to play DVD's, CD's, and original Playstation games.

The system's technology reigned far above other gaming systems with its 128 bit processor, its Dolby Digital USB ports. official U.S. zine, (Novem-October 26, l e a s e d Playstation2 stores in the of PS2's was the expected shipped to the many students new gaming holiday season nation, includ-Valley. The PS2 came with a few new components such as new dual shock controllers and the Playstation2 stand, which made the system stand up vertically. Game-making manufacturers created a wide range of games for the system with clear, smooth, and amazing graphics. Games for the PS2 included sports, action, adventure and driving games. Overall, the Playstation2 was a great product with great games and components to be enjoyed by many...that is, if you were one of the lucky few to find one for sale during the pre-holiday season rush of 2000.

Fears to Jeers

Staff Writer: Chantal Ammary

Crowded hallways, locker jams, and of course the infamous, "getting lost" were some of the many fears freshmen faced before coming to Dieruff. Before starting high school, many students worried about quite a few things. Students had to adjust to the school along with cohabitating with the upperclassmen. Most freshmen probably worried about getting picked on, such as getting shoved into a locker or being tripped in the hallways, but Dieruff was nothing like some of the harsh shows on T.V. When asked how she felt about her high school freshman year, Maggie Barakat stated, "At first I thought Dieruff was going to be hard to adjust to, but once I got here, I had nothing to worry about." As soon as school was back in session a large population of the freshman class realized their worries were over.

"A lot has changed since I was a freshman," reminisced Junior Lauren Amary. "I was scared to start high school. Now three years later I'm scared to graduate!" Being a Junior was a lot of fun if the homework was done. Grades put some pressure on the juniors as well because colleges looked closely at students' junior year, but an eagerness to graduate filled the minds of many upperclassmen. Many may have started out frightened, but they ended fearless.

Junior Kristina Azar told us, "The good thing about everything is that I had a lot of great memories so far here at DHS. I have met so many people since I was a freshman. The bad side to all of this is that I will leave so many behind as I say good-bye to Husky High." Many cherished memories were created throughout a student's four-year high school career, and it was sad yet true that those moments would never be recaptured.

However, Junior Danny Aponte left us with a positive thought as he commented, "Junior year has been a pretty cool experience. I have to start preparing for the real world and make the best of high school. Everything counts in the end."

A Closer View. Junior Natalie Barto completes a lab report for her Lab Survey class, taught by Ms. Hein. The coursework during junior year was often very intense.

"I always have some kind of accessory on. I usually wear a necklace, an earring and a tongue ring."

We all loved coming to school dressed up and looking our best. That is why wearing the right accessory was very important to Dieruff High School students. Denim jackets, whether in faded blue or dark indigo, gave the right look dressed up or down. Silver, gold, or beaded hoop earrings gave an instant glam factor. Basic black boots were styling and sleeking everyone's legs. And, what was the fastest way to look like a movie star? Wear a hot pair of shades!

All of these items were available for purchase at a variety of stores in the Lehigh Valley Mall for under $20. "Claire's" shop has the hottest and latest accessories to accentuate your clothing," commented Junior Sylvia Halat, when asked about where students shopped for their fashionable accessories. "Claire's" is a very popular store with a price range that most students can afford," Halat continued.

Andrew Brittan, an eleventh grader who always wore a long silver chain around his neck, stated, "Wearing long silver chains is a fad right now, and everyone wants to wear them."

So, whether it was dying one's hair a different color each day to school or wearing rings on all ten fingers, we all knew that wearing that right accessory made the big difference in our appearance.

Don't Fudget... Budget!

Staff Writer:
Jodi Wasco

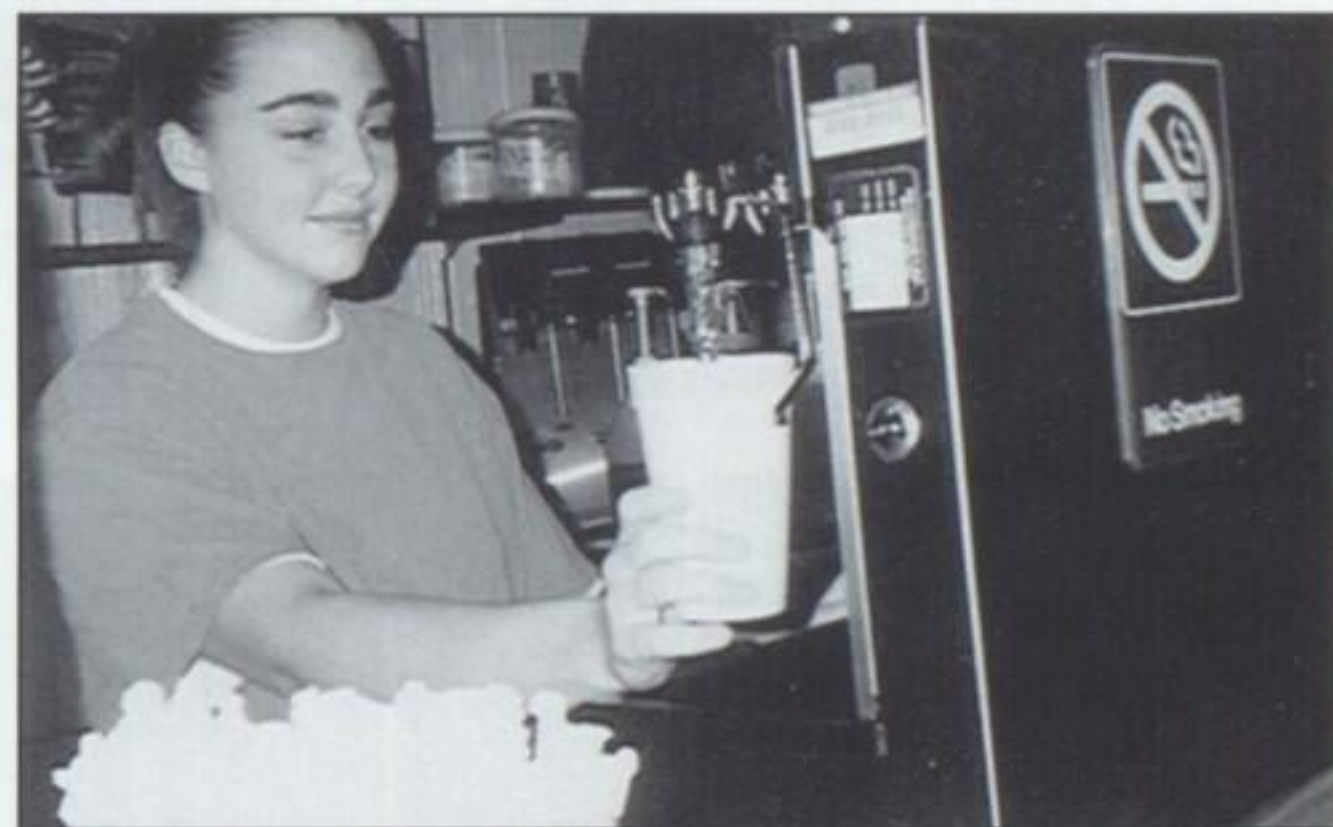

"Keeping track of your money can be tough. It seems to spend so fast. I like to spend my extra money on snacks and clothes."

Marco Rodriguez

How did students budget their money when they held a part time job? Did they save any of the money that they earned? What did they spend their money on? Money seemed to come and go very fast, and many teens did not realize where it all went.

Senior Dale Martrich saved at least fifty dollars every two weeks just to save money. He said, "My average salary was about two hundred and seventy-five dollars every two weeks. I spend money on paying bills like car insurance, going out to eat, and also on socializing," Martrich said. He was a paperboy in his neighborhood.

Jen Grim, sophomore, worked at Boulevard Lanes at the concession stand. She retorted, "I make about one hundred dollars every two weeks, and I save at least fifty dollars to put in the bank for a car." Grim spent extra money on clothes, CD's, and food.

"I work at Sears in the shoe department, and I work on strict commission," Nancy Atiyeh, senior, explained. "I put a lot of money in the bank, because I'm trying to pay for college, car expenses, and all the extra senior year expenses," Atiyeh continued. She also liked to spend her extra money on clothes and going out to have fun.

It was a difficult time-management task for teens to hold a part time job and save money for things, but a part time job helped pay those bills that many teens faced. Budgeting money also was a very good thing for teaching teens how to be responsible. For example, putting money in the bank, budgeting weekly spending money, paying bills on time, and spending money wisely were some of the few fiscal responsibilities teens faced. This showed that teens were learning to live in the real world and anxious to assume full adult responsibilities.

Don't RAT Us Out!

Editor:
Laura Howard

"I like going to the mall to shop and hang out with friends. The mall offers a large variety of stores, and there's always something to do."

Hasna Saoud
Grade 12

Rats, rats, rats, mall rats everywhere! Since the Lehigh Valley Mall opened it had become a popular hangout to teenage students. Dieruff students went to the mall to either go shopping or to hangout with their friends. "I like going to the mall to chill and also to see what new gear they have out in style. The other reason why I like going to the mall is to shop," stated Wilma Santiago.

Many Dieruff students worked in the mall. Being an employee in the mall offered many benefits. For example, employees got discounts at different stores throughout the mall. Many student employees either worked on weekends only or after school. Ashley Freer commented, "Working at the mall gives me a chance to make money and meet different types of people. Also, my friends can visit me while I'm working."

The Lehigh Valley Mall included stores such as Abercrombie & Fitch, Aeropostale, and Bath & Body Works. Over the past 3 years the mall had been remodeled, attracting visitors from all over.

Mall rats were found at any mall. They were often just teenagers who visited the mall everyday and stayed there all day and all night.

Fabulous Feet. Juniors Rria Castellano and Ana Diaz take their break at The 5-7-9 store. Both girls were employed at the mall and spent much of their free time shopping and working.

From roller skates to roller blades, from skateboards to bikes, the new, mini, collapsible scooters were a hit among many students. The scooters were an improved version of their bulkier red ancestors, popular decades ago. The new scooters were much smaller, easy for storage, and lightweight, compared to the older versions, which came with foot brakes and shocks.

"I like the new scooters because they're not like bicycles where you have to push with your feet. You can just stand on the scooter and ride it easily," commented Waad Hadid, junior.

Razor scooters were sold at several locations in the Lehigh Valley Mall, located on MacArthur Road, including Macy's, Afterthoughts, The Electronic Store, Limited Too, and Deb. Prices typically ranged between $99.95 and $115.00. Toy's R Us, also located in Whitehall, advertised scooters for approximately $49- $119.00.

These new modes of transportation were prohibited in most schools, even though they could have easily fit into a student's locker. School officials hoped to avoid not only possible thefts of such wanted items, but also to keep the number of scooter-related accidents to a minimum. Scooters were under close scrutiny by parents and consumer groups, due to the increasing number of injuries suffered by riders. Assistant principal Mr. Marcks stated, "Three reasons why: First storage, next theft, and then safety."

However, these concerns did not quell the enthusiasm of most young riders. Small and easy to ride, students had no problem getting from and to a near-by location. Tony Pho, sophomore, stated, "Scooters are cool! Even though my leg gets tired after a while, it's still fun!"

Staff Writer: Mary Pho

Better than Walking. Junior Felix Jimenez shows off his skills on a scooter after school. The scooters were very popular among the guys, even though they were not allowed to be stored in school lockers.

Movie Mania.

Freshman Brandon Wann displays three of his favorite movies for his DVD player. DVD's featured a wide screen selection and clips from movies not in theater releases. Many DVD movies also contained info on how many of the movies were made.

Digital video discs, or DVD's, were the newest invention in video technology. The DVD players worked basically the same way as VCR's, except that they needed to be handled more carefully and taken better care of. The disks allowed viewers to watch movies using CD's that could be played in a DVD player, as well as in many of the newer computers. This new technology allowed movie fans to fast forward or rewind to any favorite scene and even skip scenes. Also, some of the players included special features such as character biographies, outtakes, and choice of language. Sophomore Jennifer Poole stated, "They're better than VCR's because you can play interactive games, so I've read."

Another tenth grader, Amanda Allan, commented, "I think they're wonderful. They're better than VCR's because they are more manageable and have better quality. Also, they're clearer and you can listen to music in the player."

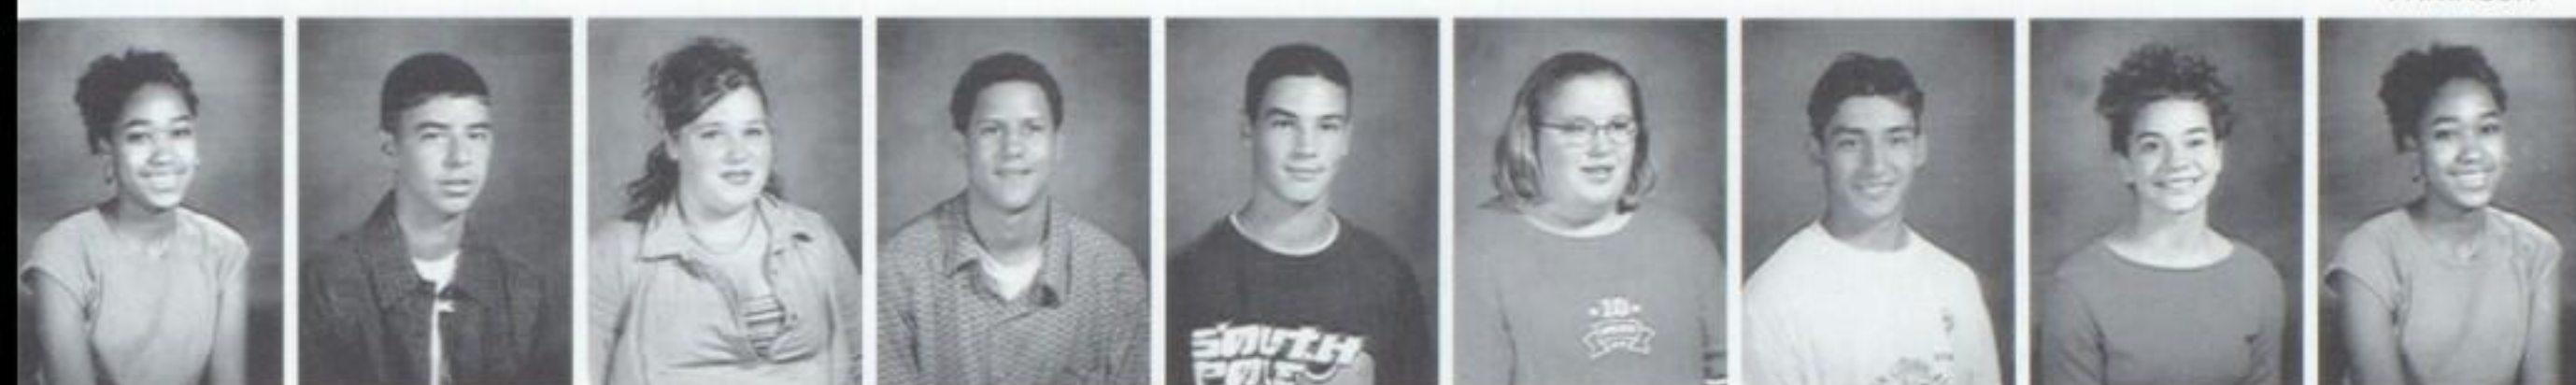

DVD players could be bought at any store in most electronics departments, such as Whitehall's Best Buy, Circuit City, and Wal-Mart. The players cost between $199 and $599, and discs could have been bought at the same stores as the players. Discs could also have been rented at video rental stores such as Hollywood Video and Blockbuster Video, with an average rental cost of $4.00 for five nights.

Most students held positive thoughts about DVD's. Sophomore Yoly Santana stated, "You can see movies better because the picture is cleaner."

Smiling with Style. Juniors Cecilia Balseca and Kathy Bentancourt spruce up their hair between classes. Teen girls often carried an extra bottle of hairspray in their purses or in their gym locker. This was a necessity!

Hairspray and gel... How important were they to teens? To many, hairsprays and gels were a part of their everyday routine.

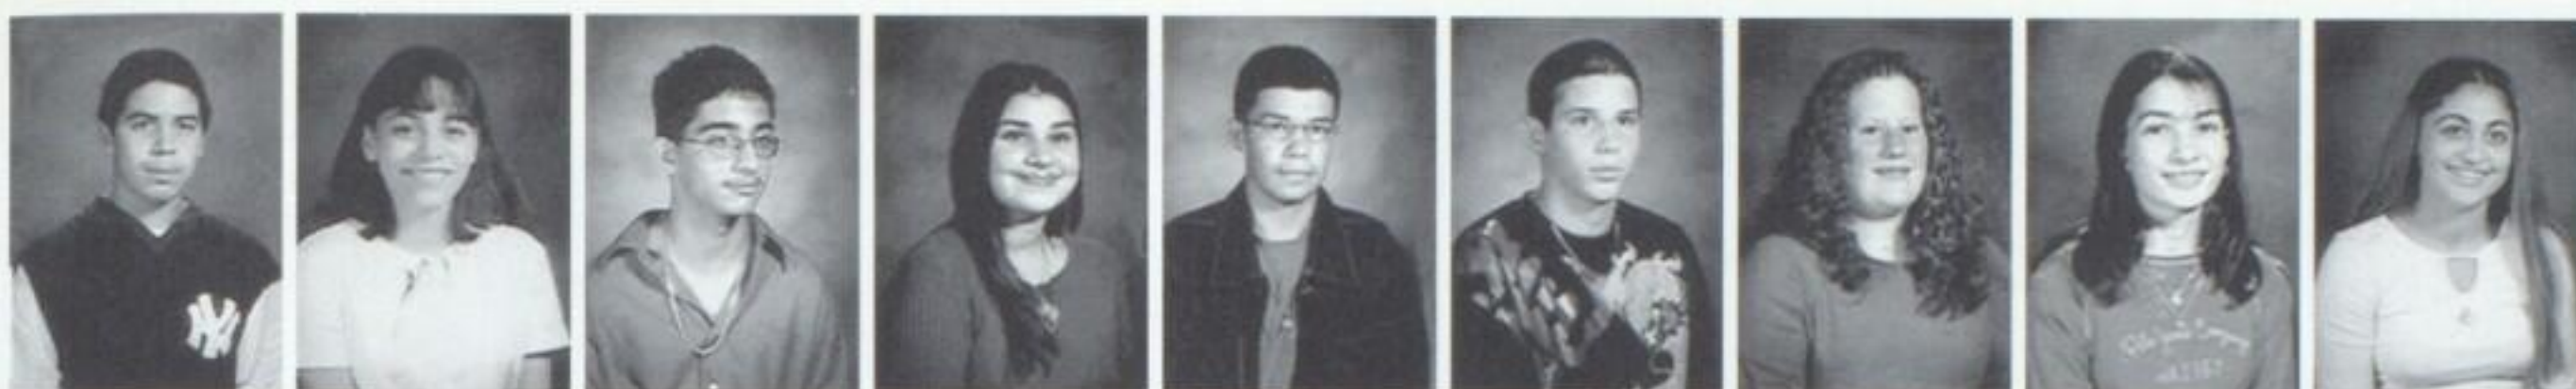

When many people thought of hairsprays and gels, many may have believed it to be a "girl thing." But, not only did girls use gel and hairsprays, but guys used them too. When asked how much hairspray or gel he used in a day, Herman Caraballo stated, "I use five squirts of hair spray and three handfuls of gel. My favorite hairspray is LA Looks because it doesn't make my hair flaky."

Everyday before going to school, many students packed hairspray into their bookbags and lockers, just so they could improve their looks at different times during the school day. Some students even claimed they would not come to school if they ran out of hair products.

Even a limited budget could afford such a luxury as hair spray. Prices varied greatly, from 99 cents a bottle to $10.00 or more, especially when buying name brand products like Nexus or Biolage, most often sold at hair and beauty salons.

When asked how much hairspray and gel she used in a week, Junior Ivelisse Donato stated, "I use half a bottle of hairspray and a handful of gel. My favorite brand is Rave because it seems to hold more. To me, hairspray is something everybody needs. That's only if you want your hair to have the extra hold it needs."

McMurray's McChallenge

Science teacher, Mr. McMurray had been teaching at Dieruff for two years. "I love the diversity of students and the lack of a sterile environment here at Husky High."

Mr. McMurray, who also taught Lab Survey and Physical Science, would not trade his job for any thing else. "I like to have the freedom that teaching provides," continued McMurray. "It's entertainment combined with the enthusiasm to learn, to have control of my own classroom, and to complete the day-to-day tasks that I enjoy most."

But, Mr. McMurray did not always want to be a teacher. It was only after studying science at Kutztown University for four years that he decided to become a teacher. "I regret not going into teaching when I first left high school." Mr. McMurray went to high school in Hershey, Pennsylvania.

When asked about what made him decide to be a teacher, Mr. McMurray replied, "I enjoy making science visually attractive and seeing kids turn into productive enthusiastic students. I also like to see them develop and solve problems for themselves. It's nice to know that I may have had some type of influence on them."

Science with a Passion. Mr. McMurray believes in a hands-on approach. He especially enjoys sharing his own dog's agility and training progress with his students annually.

A BOARD BULLETIN...

The Allentown School Board: Dick Nepon, Janice L. Williams, C. Collins Brown, Carol Watters, James R. LeVan, Patricia D. Hoffman, Jeanette Eichenwald, Jeff Glazier, Sandra H. Stecker.

Jim LeVan was once again elected to his fifth term as board president at the December board reorganization meeting. He continued to focus on the problems that were facing the district. "We will do whatever it takes to meet the expectations of our community," said Mr. LeVan.

Our superintendent, Dr. Diane Scott, reviewed the NWEA test results from the spring of 1998, 1999 and 2000. When fall and spring tests were compared, there were greater gains in reading, mathematics, and language arts in 2000 than in 1999. The district was looking for ways to help students make greater gains in a shorter period of time.

The school board's primary tasks remained challenging, with a large focus on improving PSSA test scores. Board members were also represented on the state's Empowerment Team, a group of community activists, board members, parents, and a teacher. The team's task was to create a plan for improving ASD's test scores.

IN CHARGE...

Mrs. Sabo

Mrs. Sabo's natural ability to communicate effectively with students, parents, and the community made her an approachable and beloved leader at Husky High. She especially enjoyed observing the classrooms when, as she said, "the lessons are interactive and interdisciplinary." The year's biggest challenge was the "Closing the Gap" process placed in the Allentown School District phase one schools. Mrs. Sabo worked closely with the faculty to plan lessons and school strategies that would specifically focus on and enrich the PA/ASD requirements. In addition to continuing to evaluate our education curriculum, she made many plans for the future, including the offering of distance learning courses and resources that would facilitate overall student achievement.

Mr. Marcks

Another year passed for Mr. Marcks, another year as he stated, "to continue to keep the Husky Pride at the level it has been since the school opened with academics, sports, clubs, and community activities." His day was always very busy, but what took most of his time was preparing to implement the Texas plan and help students bring their abilities up to the state's required levels. Mr. Marcks also commented that his biggest challenge this year was getting students to realize how important the PSSA testing was. Mr. Marcks's favorite part of the day was working with students, with the public, and with the staff, "especially with challenging tasks," he admitted.

Mrs. Stimmel

For three years, Mrs. Stimmel, our assistant principal, has done her hardest to keep Dieruff a safe and challenging place for students to learn. One of her biggest challenges this year was the issuing and enforcing use of the locks. Students were given a school lock at the beginning of the school year to place on their locker to help prevent theft. Mrs. Stimmel stated, "The hassle of issuing them and keeping track of them frustrated me." However, the part of her job that she enjoyed the most was observing the classrooms. She enjoyed walking into a classroom and seeing students pay attention, participate in activities, and understand the lesson.

TAKE MY ADVICE...

And Today We Will...
Guidance counselor Mrs. Kelly takes a few minutes to discuss the daily office plans with secretary Miriam Iyer.

Mr. Mihalik

Mrs. Schnalzer

A typical day for the five guidance counselors at Dieruff consisted of advising students regarding their college and career options, working out personal concerns, scheduling courses, and calculating grades and credits. "The best part of my day is helping students plan for life after Dieruff and helping them to succeed in life," stated counselor Mr. Mihalik.

Counselors also were often the bridge between many parents and teachers, facilitating conferences and making phone calls. The guidance offices were often occupied with guardian and parents, either with new enrollments or parent-teacher-students meetings.

Each year the guidance department held a set of goals which they strived to arrive at. Just a few included helping students achieve at their ability level, reach their post-secondary plans, and teach students to be self-reliant.

Dieruff's school nurse, Mrs. Anne Povenski, not only took good care of the sick, but she was also responsible for maintaining the health room's paperwork and medical records. One of the year's biggest challenges for our caring nurse was to pull out all students who needed their MMR2 shots and obtain required physical forms from the eleventh graders. Students who did not receive their MMR2 shots nor their physicals were not allowed to continue attending Husky High until all requirements had been met, and the enforcer of this state policy was our very own Mrs. Povenski.

Mrs. Povenski

Mr. Trotter

Dieruff High School's athletic director, Mr. Trotter, had been a part of Dieruff for 33 years. He worked as a teacher and a coach before becoming Husky High's athletic director. The sports program at Dieruff appeared to be in transition. For example, the football stadium began renovations and the gym was scheduled to be repainted. Mr. Trotter's best part of the day was watching Husky athletes participate while observing the fellowship and bonding between team members. "Dieruff has always been competitive in athletics. Our goal is to improve the number of participants as well as victories. With the East Penn Conference being only five teams, the opportunities to upgrade the schedules has been positive. I know of no other school I would enjoy as much as I enjoy Dieruff," Trotter continued.

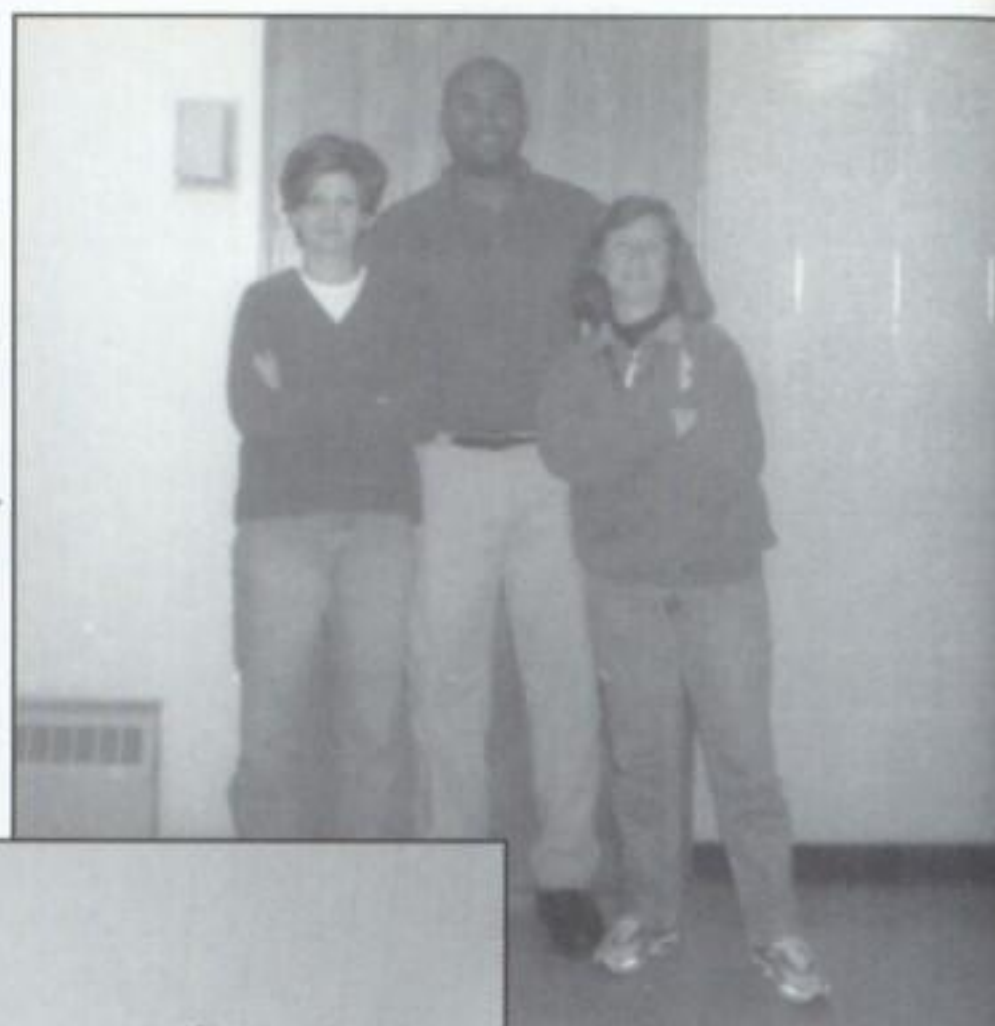

Enjoying Her Work. Mrs. Schnalzer, like the rest of the guidance counselors, maintains a positive attitude at school despite her very busy day.

Probation Officers Continue to Keep...

A Watchful Eye

A very important group of staff members at Dieruff were the probation officers. Tracie Jeradi, probation officer at DHS, Harrison-Morton, Trexler, South-Mountain, and Allen said, "I meet with students at least once a week, unless otherwise needed, making sure they come to school everyday. I also try to help them maintain their grades if they are good, or help them bring them up if they are not." Unknown to many students, Patti Evers, Greg Moore and Tracie Jeradi, LED's full team of probation officers, held more responsibilities than just in school. "I have to appear in court, call placements, and occasionally visit houses and jobs. I also work with the PAD program (Prisoners Against Drugs), and sometimes I go to the Hispanic American Organization," Jeradi explained.

An Effective Trio!

"Allentown's Finest" in our Halls

Robert Kulp, our school police officer, was a very approachable and friendly figure. He was known for having a good relationship with students. Officer Kulp's goals for DHS were to have a proactive interaction with students and to keep the school experience safe and enjoyable. When asked what his best part and worst part of the day was, he responded, "The best part of the school day is observing students learning and improving in the school setting. The worst part of the school day is when a student puts themselves in a situation that requires me to make an arrest." He says working at DHS has been an enjoyable part of his career. "The students are friendly and well behaved; faculty members have been receptive of me and the cooperation we share has been beneficial to the school district and the police department."

Security Guards Always...

Keeping It Under Control

What would Dieruff be like without no one to stay on point? Thanks to security guards Jose Rosario and Lucy Diaz, the Huskies marched on the right track. Jose commented, "I like being around kids, but my biggest challenge is to make sure the school is always under control." Jose's typical day included hall patrol, lunch duty, and special escorting assignments.

"I love being around the students, talking with them and advising them," stated Luz Diaz. Her working day also included hall patrol, and our security guards were alerted to areas of the building via two-way radios, a necessity for all school personnel involved with security. Lucy had been in the security field for thirteen years.

Taking the Custodial Challenge...

Custodians, what would we have done without them? Such a large, time-consuming job. Dieruff staffed eleven custodians who rotated in three different shifts. Steve Budihas, head of the custodial staff, commented, "Not many people realize how much work it actually is, especially when we have bad weather." Even though it has been a large responsibility, Steve has dedicated 17 years to his work. "I like my job; the days go fast. I'm always doing something. Some days are easy and some are hectic, but every day is a typical day." Budihas and his staff were basically responsible for keeping the Huskies' home clean, safe, and functional. Budihas concluded, "The most important part of working at Dieruff is to always be ready and on the go."

Born in Allentown PA, Sharon P. Adams was not only a favorite "cafeteria lady," but she was a friend to many DHS students. Sharon graduated from Dieruff in 1978 and attended N.A.C.C and majored in commercial art. One of her most embarrassing moments occurred when Mr. Hartman announced to the entire second lunch that it was her birthday and he asked everyone to sing. "There was nowhere to hide!" Sharon stated. One of the reasons she chose this job was because she wanted to be able to have transportation for her children, who attended Dieruff. Working for the Allentown School District in the cafeteria enabled her to do just that. When asked what she liked best about her job, she replied, "The students. We see them come in as freshmen and we watch them mature into seniors." Sharon continued, "The kind of attitude you should have for this job includes personal pride. You come into work, you do your job, and you do it to the best of your ability."

Closer to the

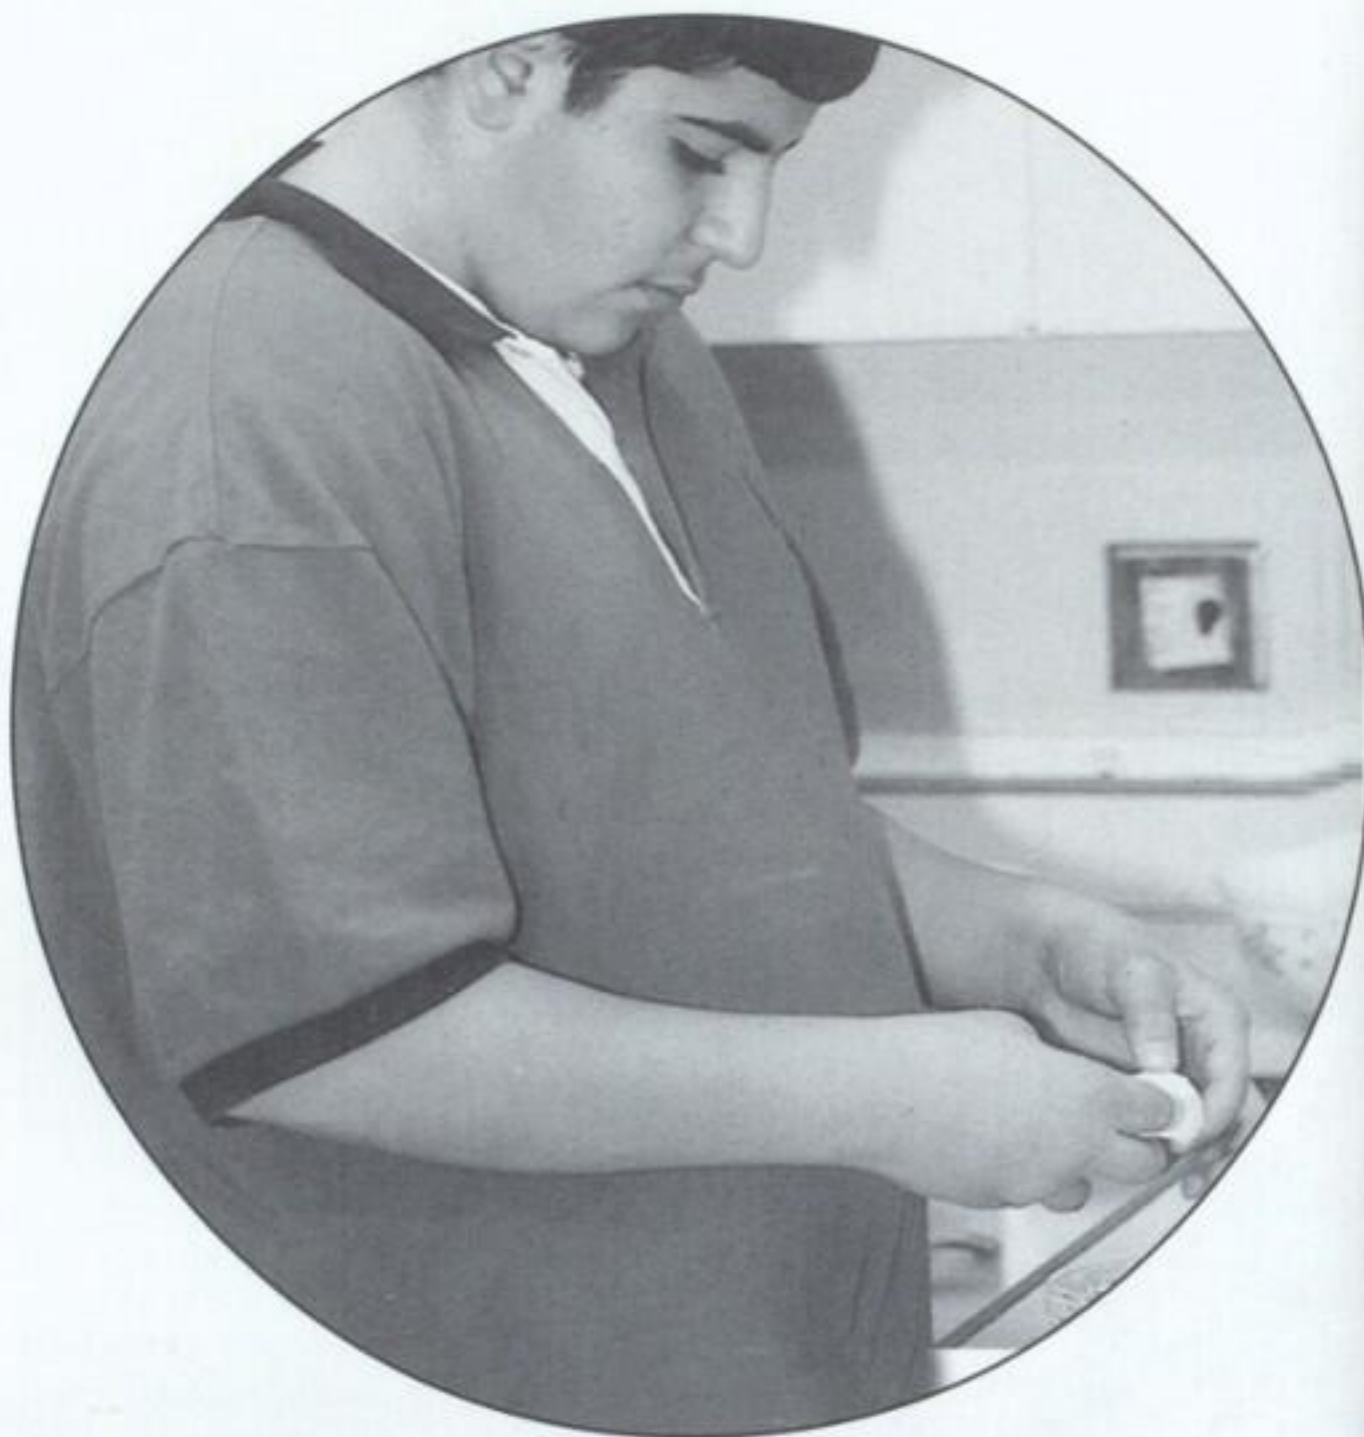

Throughout the 2000-2001 school year there were many memorable occasions, such as school dances, exciting sporting events, and academic and sportsmanship ceremonies. But, an event that happened every day that often seemed to go unnoticed was all the hard work Dieruff students put into each school day.

Regardless of whether a student's interest was in literature, in music, in art, in mathematics, in science, or in foreign language, each had the opportunity to expand their knowledge in that subject.

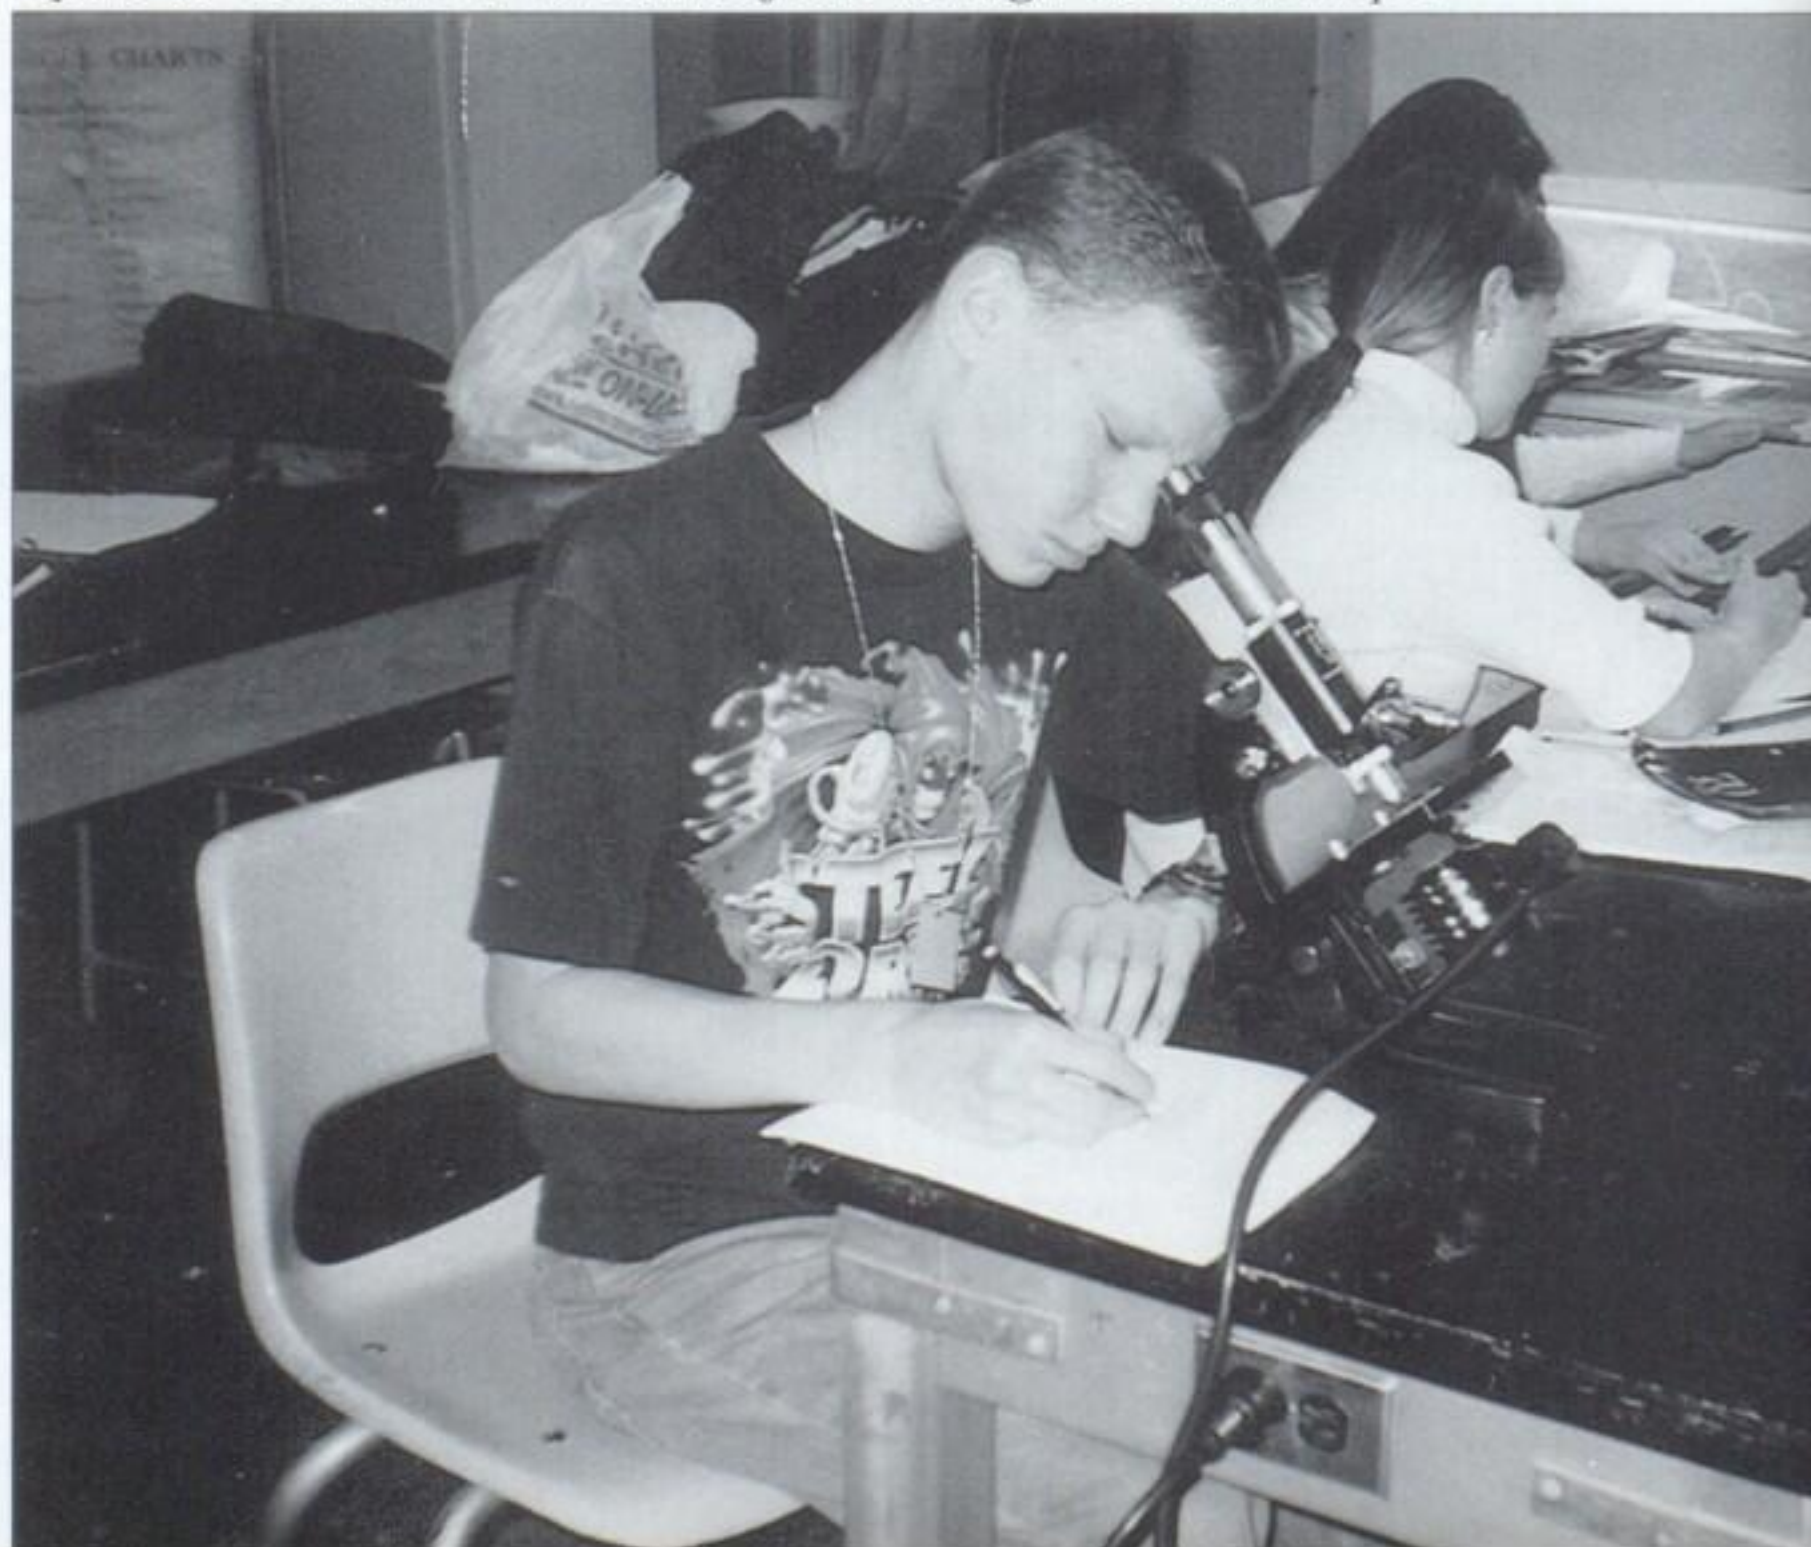

As in years past, students were given the chance to relate to real life situations, problems, and challenges in Parenting and Adult Living classes. This year's first semester Adult Living classes successfully pulled off a mock wedding. "Everyone had a share in the wedding. The invitations, reception, wedding procession, food, and everything else that is involved in a real wedding, was taken care of by my students," explained Home Economics teacher Mrs. Pitera.

Overall, Louis E. Dieruff students worked with commendable praise, whether it was to figure out a homework problem, diagram a sentence, or remember a locker combination. Setting goals remained a priority as Dieruff students reached for their futures.

Home Economics

Mrs. Pitera, department head, and Mrs. Steckel, cooking teacher, comprised our Home Economics department.

Home Ec courses were based on the overall changes in the field, which was reflected in what was taught. As a result, classes were given a new name, Family and Consumer Services.

Activities offered in Home Ec courses included the Adult Living wedding, the Ritter Reading Program, Snowball food preparation, production of gingerbread houses, and holiday entertaining. Mrs. Pitera commented, "We have always been performance-based, and these activities give students an opportunity to use what they have learned."

Students most enjoyed the projects where they were actively involved in their learning, such as making chicken turnovers or stitching the quilt for sick children. But, not every single class could be conducted without having background information and demonstrations first. Mrs. Pitera continued, smiling, "We get lots of groans on lecture days."

Staff Writer: Steph Ditzel

Art and Music

Mrs. Wehr was left with many responsibilities after Mr. Danko's retirement in 2000. She resculpted the art department by exploring different areas of art. Her pupils used many types of media and techniques in order to gain more experience with the field. Some interesting projects students completed were sand art, dreamcatchers, and self portraits.

The Art and Nature program, which was affiliated with the Academy/Charter activities, had an interesting year. The course allowed students from the program to learn about wildlife nature and transform it into works of art. "The course let me express my interests in art and nature," quoted Senior Nina Lewis. The transformation between perception and expression was very apparent in the beautiful displays found in and around room 4.

Technology Ed

The head of the Tech Ed department, Mr. Hartman, stated, "The new state of the art FACET system, which is new in the department, stands for Fault Assisted Circuits for Electronics Training." FACET was a self-teaching electronics program where a student was taught basic electronics up to and including microprocessors.

"These ideas differ from last year," Mr. Hartman said, "because the Academy of Information Technology allowed financial funding to develop state of the art activities." In the past, much of the equipment was twenty to thirty years old, but the new equipment allowed students to move at their own pace.

"The big projects for the department included a management system for FACET," Mr. Hartman explained. Each individual student was evaluated individually, and records were kept by the teachers to accurately determine progress.

Many students in 2001 missed the course Architecture/Mechanical Drawing, which was dropped from the Tech Ed curriculum.

Mathematics

"I love being head of the math department because I get to work with great people. With the department's input we make changes to try and improve the curriculum and student performance," stated Mr. Leh.

Mr. Leh and his colleagues initiated a new technique this year. They adapted instructional lessons from Brazosport, Texas, in compliance with the district's new "Closing the Gap" initiative. This included setting up tutorial time for students who performed below state averages. Teachers also conducted mini-lessons on topics where students scored below PSSA standards. Math classes, as well as English classes, were affected the most by the district's new instructional plan.

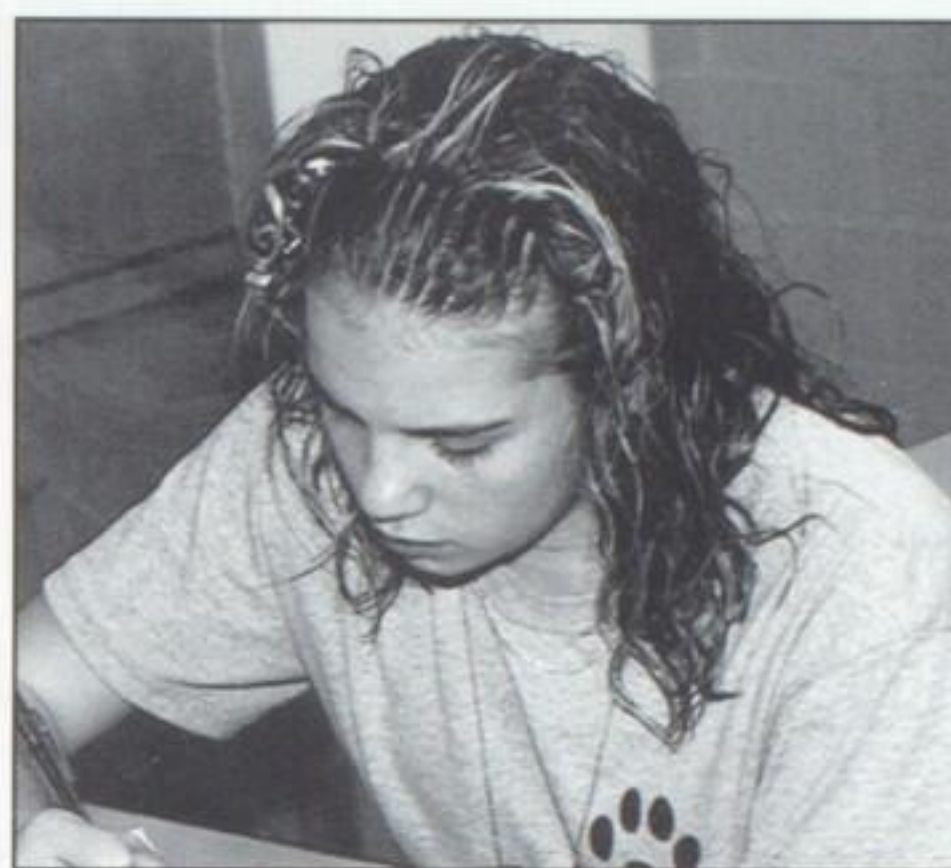

New teachers included Mrs. Reidy and Dieruff's own Mr. Kish, former player for the Baltimore Ravens.

Staff Writer: Jodi Wasco

The leadership in the science department had been in the hands of an experienced, outstanding teacher. The department was headed by Mr. Roy Arlotto for the twenty-eighth consecutive year.

One change was made to the department; Mr. McHugh was hired full time for the replacement of the retired Mr. Bilder. "I've always wanted to teach and I know what students are like from student teaching here last year," commented Mr. McHugh.

Also, the pond was successfully completed under the leadership of Ms. Hein. "It looks neat and it's useful not only to the science people, but also to the art students," stated Arlotto. The science department was expecting new biology books in the near future.

Science

Mrs. Porotsky, the English department head, had given twenty-eight years of service to the teaching business. She was appointed to chairperson in 2001 and had been fulfilling these duties for four years. When asked if she felt pressured with all her responsibilities, Mrs. Porotsky stated, "I don't have enough time to worry about them." Mrs. Porotsky taught five classes and was active on many committees. "For all that I have to do, there aren't enough hours in a day," Mrs. Porotsky continued. Mrs. Porotsky usually finished her day around 6:00. She was a dedicated teacher who believed she made a difference in her department.

Department news included the district's "Closing the Gap" initiative, which impacted heavily on Dieruff English classes. Teachers adopted an instructional focus, which occurred in the first ten minutes of class. These were designed to increase student performance on the state's PSSA reading test.

Social Studies

The Social Studies department underwent several changes. A new teacher, Mr. Lutterschmidt, was hired, the Social Studies office was refurbished, and the department chair position was reappointed.

Mr. Dale Weiss became the new department head after Mr. Yoder left to work at the administration building full time. "I find the Social Studies department to be very easygoing, and a lot of support is received when needed by the teachers."

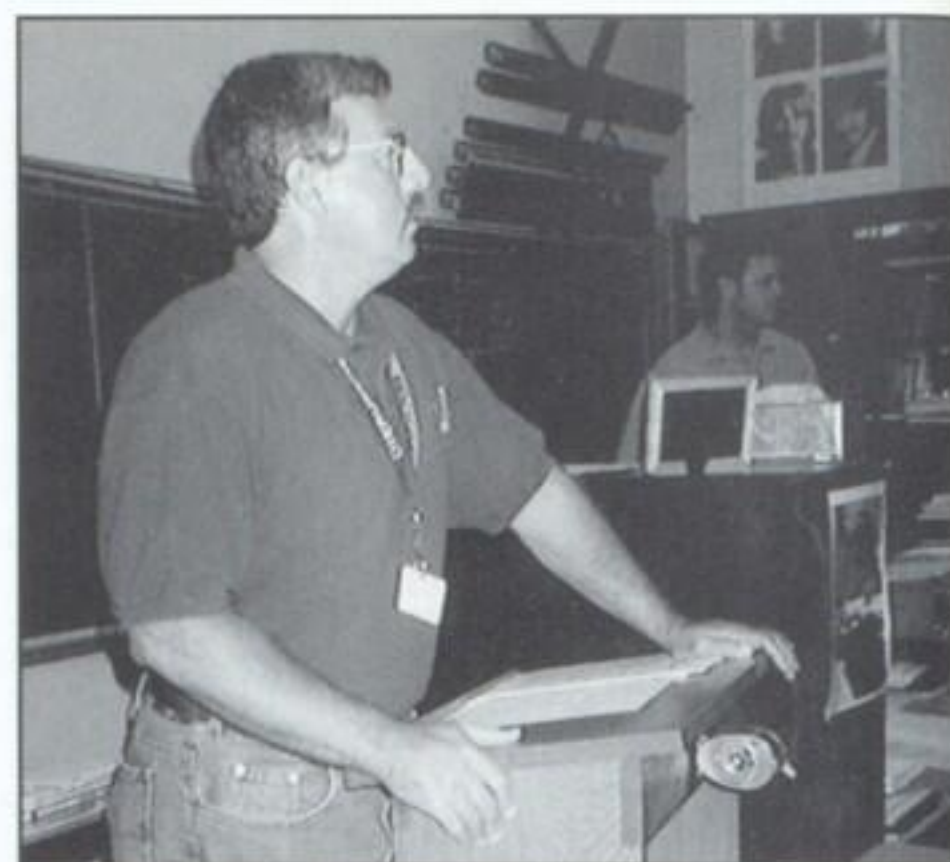

Mr. Weiss, who was a former baseball coach, held numerous responsibilities as department head. He had to help with lesson plans for teachers, prepare budgets, determine what the department wanted, and assist in scheduling. "I am like the liaison between my department and the administration," commented Mr. Weiss.

Foreign Language

Have you ever been to a foreign land? No? Many Huskies found that the foreign language department brought foreign countries one step closer to home.

Students could have taken French, Spanish, German or Latin. Besides learning the grammar, spelling and usage of the language, students also learned the culture of the inhabitants. "My favorite part of French class is learning about the different types of food," stated Sophomore Ryan Zegalia, but that was not the only interesting focus of study the department offered.

Students also enjoyed learning about the historical background of their country, which was incorporated into the lesson plan to practice grammar.

Students even got some hands-on experience with foreign cultures by learning and playing typical games of a country or going to see plays with historical and cultural references. "I love German class. It's fun and exciting to learn about the culture and their everyday lives," commented Sophomore Luis Ribera.

Special Education

Mrs. Szalachowski, head of the Special Education department, stated, "Our Special Education department has dynamic, conscientious teachers who are always giving that extra effort to meet the needs of our special education students."

In addition, two new teachers joined the Special Ed department staff, Ms. Jan Schultz and Ms. Christy Wright. For the second year, special education students were a part of the Hip-Hop Husky Shop. They created T-shirts and jewelry for spirit week. Students also ran a stand selling homemade items for parent/guardian night.

The work-experience program, run by Ms. Pecklun, did very well for the second year. "Ms. Pecklun is always improving and expanding the work experience program for our special ed students," commented Mrs. Szalachowski. The teachers in the Special Ed department were very meticulous in improving and enhancing their students' academic programs.

"An emphasis on technology" was a goal Mr. Weaver wanted to accomplish as a business teacher. Four and a half teachers comprised the business department. Our "half teacher" was Mr. Cappana, who taught half a day at DHS and half a day at William Allen. Mrs. Bev Quigney chaired the department for the year 2000-2001, and Mrs. Kopcho and Mrs. Nemeth completed DHS's business department.

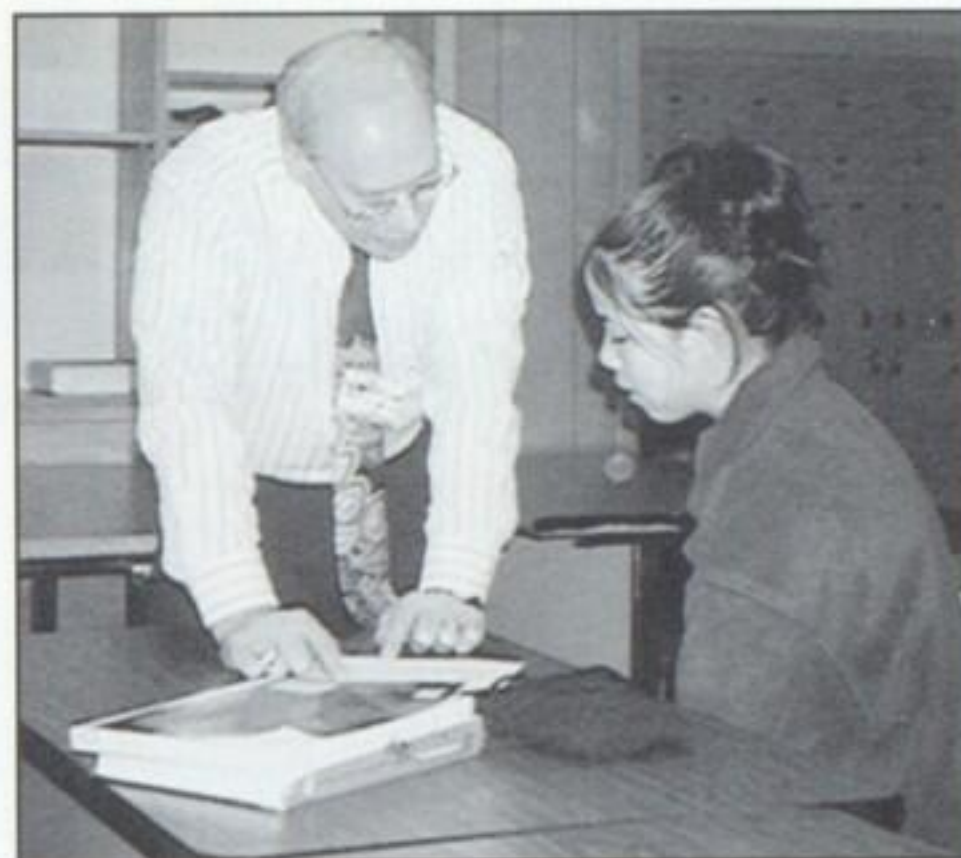

Business students chose from four elective classes. Although there were no new courses offered in 2000-2001, Mr. Weaver commented that there would be new courses in the future, such as Webpage Design, Desktop Publishing, and Using the Internet. These classes would be half a year and offered only to students in grades ten through twelve. Mr. Weaver stated, "We are trying to make our classes more appealing to more students."

Staff Writer: Lisa Azar

Although there were no major changes in the Physical Education department, the faculty still tried to rotate the activities so students could receive a variety of different exercises. Mrs. Cruttenden, department chair, stated, "The department is working with new standards and some new activities might come in."

Students took a phys ed class for two quarters of the year at a maximum of four times a week, which allowed room for a study hall one day a week. Each student had to pass gym every year in order to graduate. Blue or black shorts and a white T-shirt was the required gym attire.

The teachers generally loved teaching their classes and had fun doing it. Mrs. McGinley, who also taught swimming, commented, "I really enjoy teaching the aquatics portion of Phys Ed because I like the challenge and I can see the progression in swimming, which is what makes it very fulfilling."

Staff Writer: Tara Ferry

Dieruff's ESOL program continued to progress as a more efficient program over the years. This set of courses developed abilities and skills to enrich the learning of non-English speaking students. "The most challenging thing as a teacher is to teach the students to function well within the American culture," stated Foreign Language and ESOL department chair Mrs. Davidson-Roth. One of the most gratifying things of instructing ESOL is "seeing the students succeed at a higher academic level," continued Davidson-Roth.

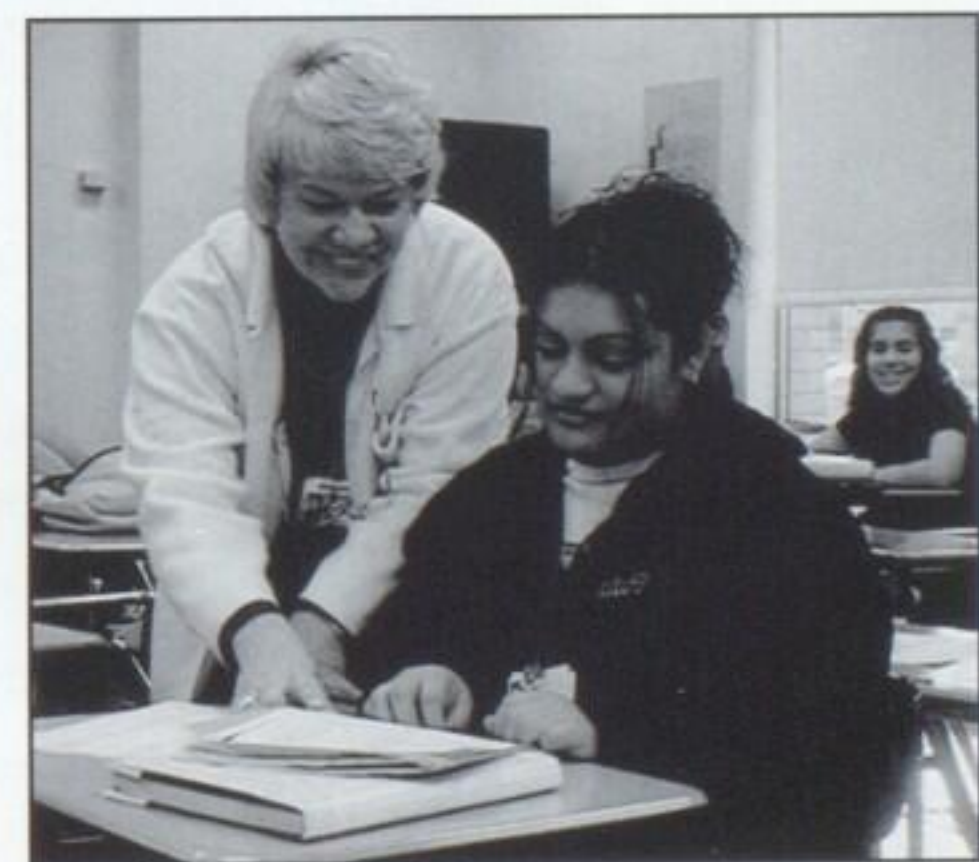

Due to an increase of enrolled ESOL students, the Foreign Language/ESOL staff had also grown. Our newest addition to the department was Mr. Donahue. Thanks to the dedicated staff, students succeeded in greater numbers. Many made honor roll and continued on to the National Honor Society.

Departments

Alive and

Louis E. Dieruff's art department was often underrated, especially when compared to their rival's art academy, William Allen High School's academy of performing and fine arts. Allen received plenty of recognition throughout the years. It was finally Dieruff's turn to shine.

Dieruff offered many challenging art courses for the 2000-2001 school term. Art department leader, Mrs. Wehr, led the department after the retirement of Mr. Danko. Dieruff students artistically mastered skills in sand art, dream catchers, and painting. "There are many talented artists attending Dieruff," said Mrs. Wehr. She also commented on how she would like to see her students reach their highest potential, because the "final product was always worth all of the hard work and effort."

Different projects created opportunities for students. Students achieved many accomplishments within the year. They even surprised the community and student body with their artistic abilities. Seniors Jen Doyle, Lisa Plessl, and Brian Smith were honored with the National Art Award. Their names, along with a brief biography, were mentioned in the National Art Awards Yearbook. Other students' work was shown on the Allentown School District website. Additional art was honorably displayed in the office of Dr. Scott, Superintendent of the Allentown School District.

A new instructor was also educating art at Dieruff for the 2000-2001 school season. Mr. Roylance taught first and second periods at Husky High before traveling to Allen for the remainder of the day. "I enjoy working with the students. They are creative, with excellent attitudes," commented Roylance.

The future of the art department was hopeful, with enrollment in art courses rising. Art study was not just for Canaries, as many in ASD may have thought. The Pride of the East Side included students with talents on the creative side along with a passion for expression. Students took advantage of their opportunities and found success in their love for art through offered DHS programs...a course of study "alive and well" at Husky High.

Tech It Out! Tech It Out! Tech It Out!

Lehigh County Career and Technical Institute, which most people know as vo-tech, was an institute where students explored different career opportunities. Many different students from a variety of schools attended vo-tech to learn and experience a trade of their choice. Vo-tech offered classes for just about everyone's interests, from cosmetology to automotive technology.

"Printing technology is fun. We learn scanning techniques, printing press applications, and laminating skills," commented Junior Dayna Villanueva.

Students were first introduced to vo-tech when a field trip to the school was made in eighth grade. In ninth grade, counselors stressed to potential vo-techers to choose their top six career choices. The six choices were narrowed down to three. These three choices were put into a twelve-day rotating schedule. Since classes filled up quickly, students with good attendance and high grades received first picks of classes. During tenth, eleventh, and twelfth grades, the

The highest ranking student in ROTC was Senior Kimberly Yurasits. She was in the program for four years. "Only about 50-70% of freshmen who begin ROTC last in the program through senior year," states Kimberly. She continued, "The students in the program always try their best to be in their position."

Students felt a lot of stress and pressure, but they knew it was for their benefit. As the cadets progressed, they realized that they had to meet high expectations to remain in the AFJROTC program.

Annual events included a revile-and-retreat ceremony, which honored all American Veterans who had fought in our wars. It was a day to remember and show respect.

for honored Americans. The group also participated in the annual Halloween parade held in Allentown, the Saint Patrick's Day Parade, and the "Soldiers and Sailors" monument dedication, which was a one-time parade.

The overall goals for ROTC, Reserved Officer Training Corps, were to build better, more productive citizens and to help high school students learn more about the country; respect selves, others and authority; and instill a sense of responsibility.

The Senior Aerospace Science Instructor, Major Jose A. Troche, stated, "This year I have been impressed with the Cadet Cadre (4th year cadets) leadership. They have accepted the challenges and have led by example, insuring that the younger cadets have the appropriate cadet role model to emulate. And, remembering always that we as cadets answer to a higher calling. We not only represent Dieruff High School, but also the United States Air Force."

CHARTERING CHARTERING New HEIGHTS

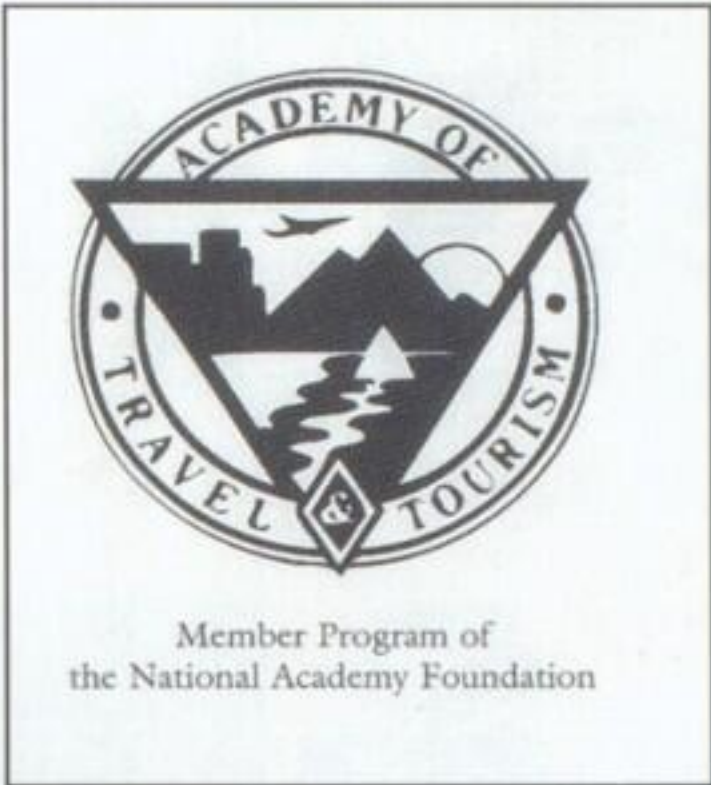

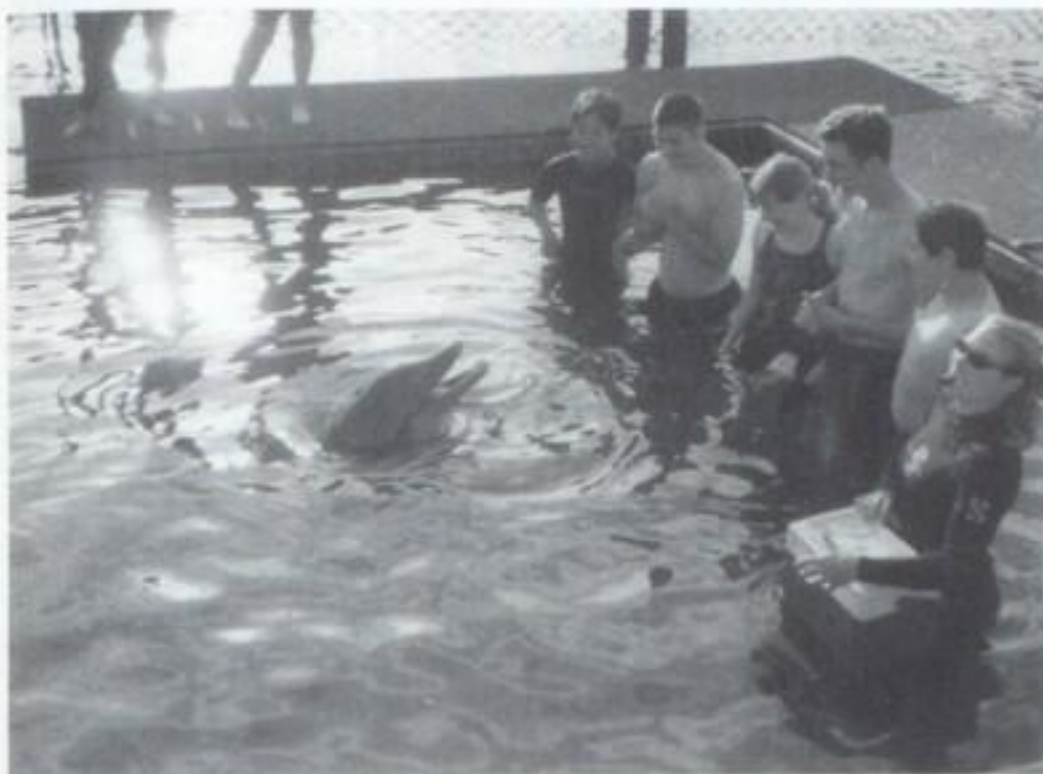

Dieruff High School had a type of school within a school. The Academy of Information Technology (AOIT), led by Mr. Billy, was a city-wide academy with the transfers of several students from Allen. Students in AOIT signed up in the eighth grade and were accepted in their ninth grade year. The program offered technical training in five different areas: computer hardware, computer graphics, computer programming, network training, and electronics. "Our lab was completely renovated with money from the National Academy Foundation, and our computers are built by students," said Mr. Billy. "We also had a lot of old computers donated from Mack Trucks that we use in our labs," he added. "The district has added components, and I sell them to students with other components. Then they can build their own computer and take it home," stated Billy. Students involved in the program had to maintain a GPA of 2.0 to remain in the academy. The Technical Academy tried to maintain the skills of an all-around student, so they can fulfill their goals for the future.

(Below) Big Boned. Senior Nina Lewis displays the huge vertebrae of a whale during the trip to Seattle, Washington. They had a chance to put together the skeleton of a whale.

The Dieruff Science Academy was a wonderful club filled with experiments and activities. The main trip for the year was to Florida. Students were able to train and swim with the dolphins. In order to earn this privilege, they needed to complete sixty college classes. The second biggest event was an educational project where students visited three elementary schools. A third trip was to the Philadelphia Zoo where students learned more about turtles in a hands-on approach.

Students actually had to apply to get into the program and go to a one-on-one interview. Behavior, good attendance, and attitude were three important qualities one needed to be in this academy.

The purpose of the program was to give students the science skills needed in order to learn more about animals and other living things. It gave students more opportunities and knowledge to use throughout life.

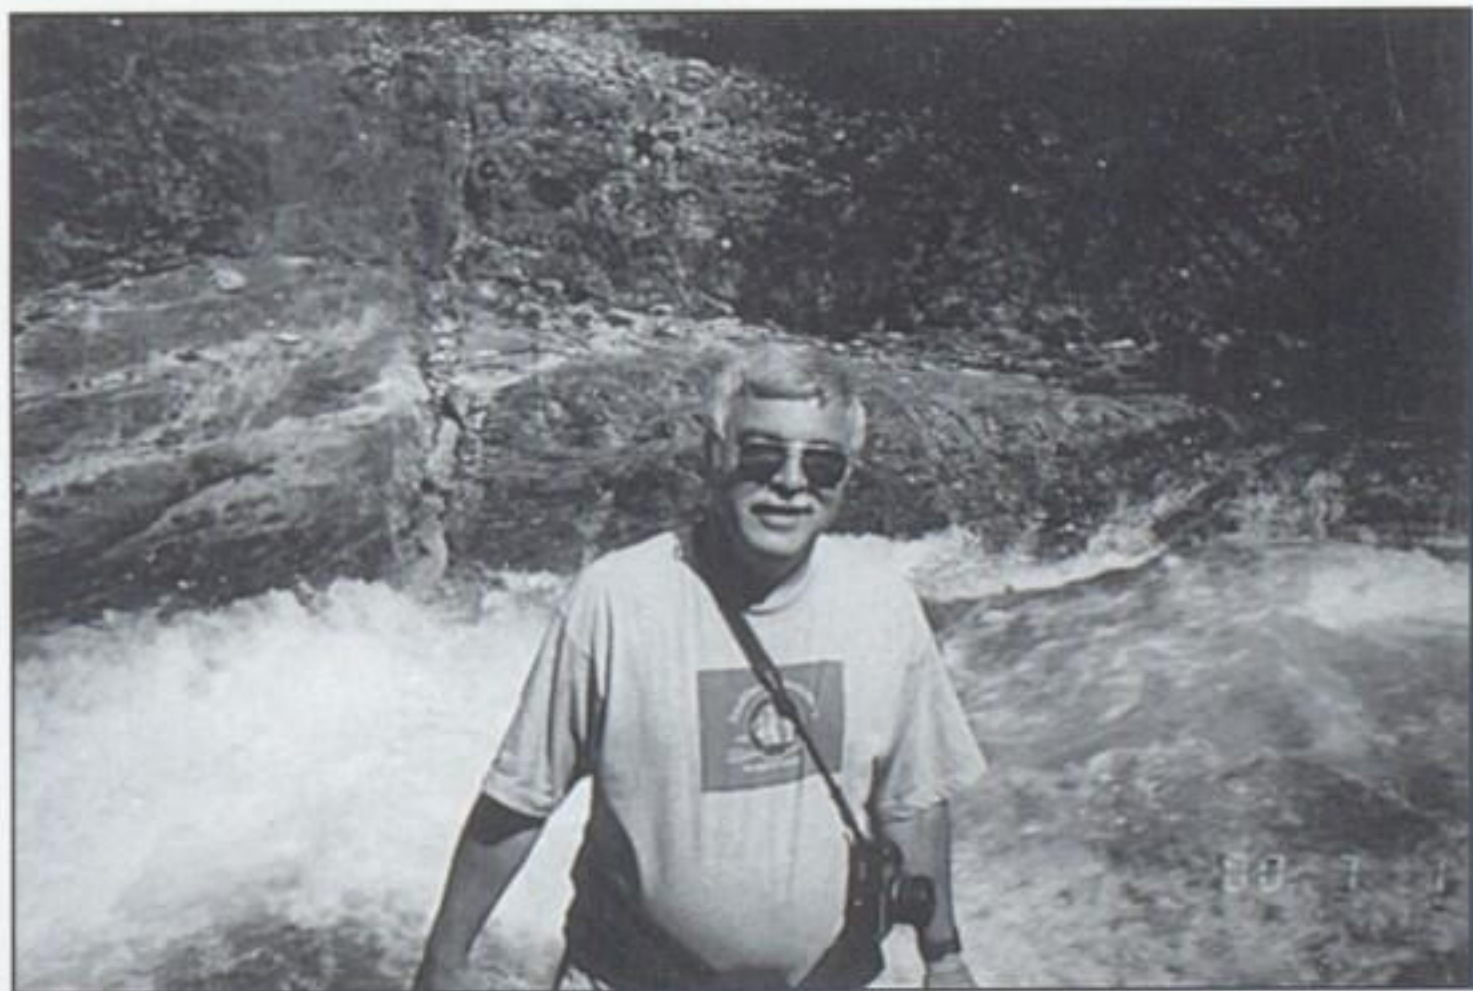

This unique program did, however, require a lot of time, focus, and attention. "It's difficult to be in the academy and do other activities, but we encourage students to play sports and join other activities besides the academy," stated Schaffer. The program was in its fifth year and planned on continuing as long as student interest remained high, according to Mr. Schaffer.

The Academy of Travel And Tourism for the Dieruff Huskies for the 2000-2001 school year started out shaky but was off to a good start. Advisor Mrs. Quigney hoped to get many more students active in the approaching school year. She visited many different middle schools to target the upcoming freshmen interested in the new academy. Unfortunately, not too many students were interested, and plans for beginning the academy courses needed to be postponed until further interest was achieved by the students. Mrs. Quigney stated, "The academy is for students who do not necessarily want to go to college but who are looking for hotel and restaurant management training." Training was planned for job skills in sales, marketing, business, and accounting.

There were eight academies in the Allentown School District, and an academy career conference took place on January 12, 2001. Eighth grade classes came to the conference and had a chance to decide what workshop they wanted to go into. Four teachers from the academy went to the National Academy Foundation conference held in Washington, D.C. over the summer.

Opportunities for academy students included internships. Internships were to be completed in the summer of a student's junior or senior year. Articulation agreements were made with LCCC and Niagra University who hoped to offer Dieruff students college credit for these internships.

The main goal of the year was to get eighth graders, future freshmen, interested in Dieruff's Academy of Travel and Tourism. Upperclassmen who were interested could not join the academy. Mrs. Quigney quoted, "There is a sequence of courses that students need to go through."

The Camera Loves Me! Mr. Schaffer, the academy's advisor, stands in front of a natural flow glacier at the opposite side of Mt. St. Helens. It was the only part of the mountain that was not ruined by the volcanic eruption.

Appearing on

Sporting events seemed to gain more and more attention with each passing year. Players and fans flaunted their Husky Pride on and off the field, and East-side pride showed especially when our football team upset our cross town rivals, the Allen Canaries, in a nerve-racking, last-minute, edge-of-your-seat victory. "The Allen/Dieruff game was the most fun I've ever had at a game. It was great seeing the whole school celebrating the win," stated Senior Tara Ferry.

The soccer team doubled their wins to four while the field hockey and girls basketball teams continued to give outstanding performances in many close games. Senior Mike Jones impressed his teammates and coach, who witnessed the rare and coveted hole-in-one shot. Personal goals were met as well as team records set.

Athletes, parents and fans realized again and again the value of hard work and dedication in the world of athleticism. Winning was always easier to cope with than losing, but a loss never waned the Husky spirit. Our athletes kept coming back, stretching for the first down, straining to the goal, kicking to the wall, sprawling to first base, and reaching for the basket. We were in this for the challenge, for the team, and for the pride.

■ Talented Husky Athletes Experience Injuries and Frustration on the Bench

Sometimes in the world of sports we hear people talk about a situation where there is pain combined with victory. When a team is struggling and looking for answers the coach will sometimes bring an athlete into a game who he thinks will give the team a boost. What happens if the player who's counted on to boost the team goes down?

Sophomore Richard "Farmer" Ocelus was given his first start as a varsity QB against Dieruff's arch rival, William Allen High School. In the first half of the game, while attempting to throw a pass Richard broke his collar bone. Farmer was taken care of by the trainers, but he missed out on what could be remembered as the greatest half of Husky football ever.

In other instances, injuries can actually take a team who's on the brink of turning a game around and turn them into a team who falls short by just a few points. In the 2001 district basketball tournament, Senior Elisandra Garcia played what was probably the best half of Husky basketball in her career. As the team, down by a few baskets, began to make a comeback, Garcia went up to block a shot and came down with a torn ACL. The team faltered and went on to lose the game by a few points.

Ice it Up. Freshman Holly Werkheiser re-injured her ankle cheering in the DHS/Allen game. She first hurt her ankle dancing for the Exc Dance Company. The strain of daily life and cheering practice caused the continuous injuries. Even though cheering was not a physical, contact sport, the splits and tumbling of cheering strained and pulled different muscles each time the girls went out to cheer.

Doc on the Job. Trainer Chris Levey checks and re-tapes Saheeb "Twink" Riddick's wrist. Wrist injuries were a very common football setback. Levey was available every day after school for different types of treatments.

So often as athletes, we take for granted the opportunities we're given to play the sports we love. When the rug is pulled out from under our feet and we're told, "It would be to the best of your advantage to sit out," it can be very depressing to just give up participating in the sport we've always loved so dearly.

Coaches can give you pep talk after pep talk until he or she turns blue in the face, but as a player with a competitive attitude there will always be an emptiness left inside. As a dedicated athlete, one may never be able to live down the thoughts of what "might have been." That, perhaps, can be even more painful than the injury itself.

Sports Editor: Tom Leauber

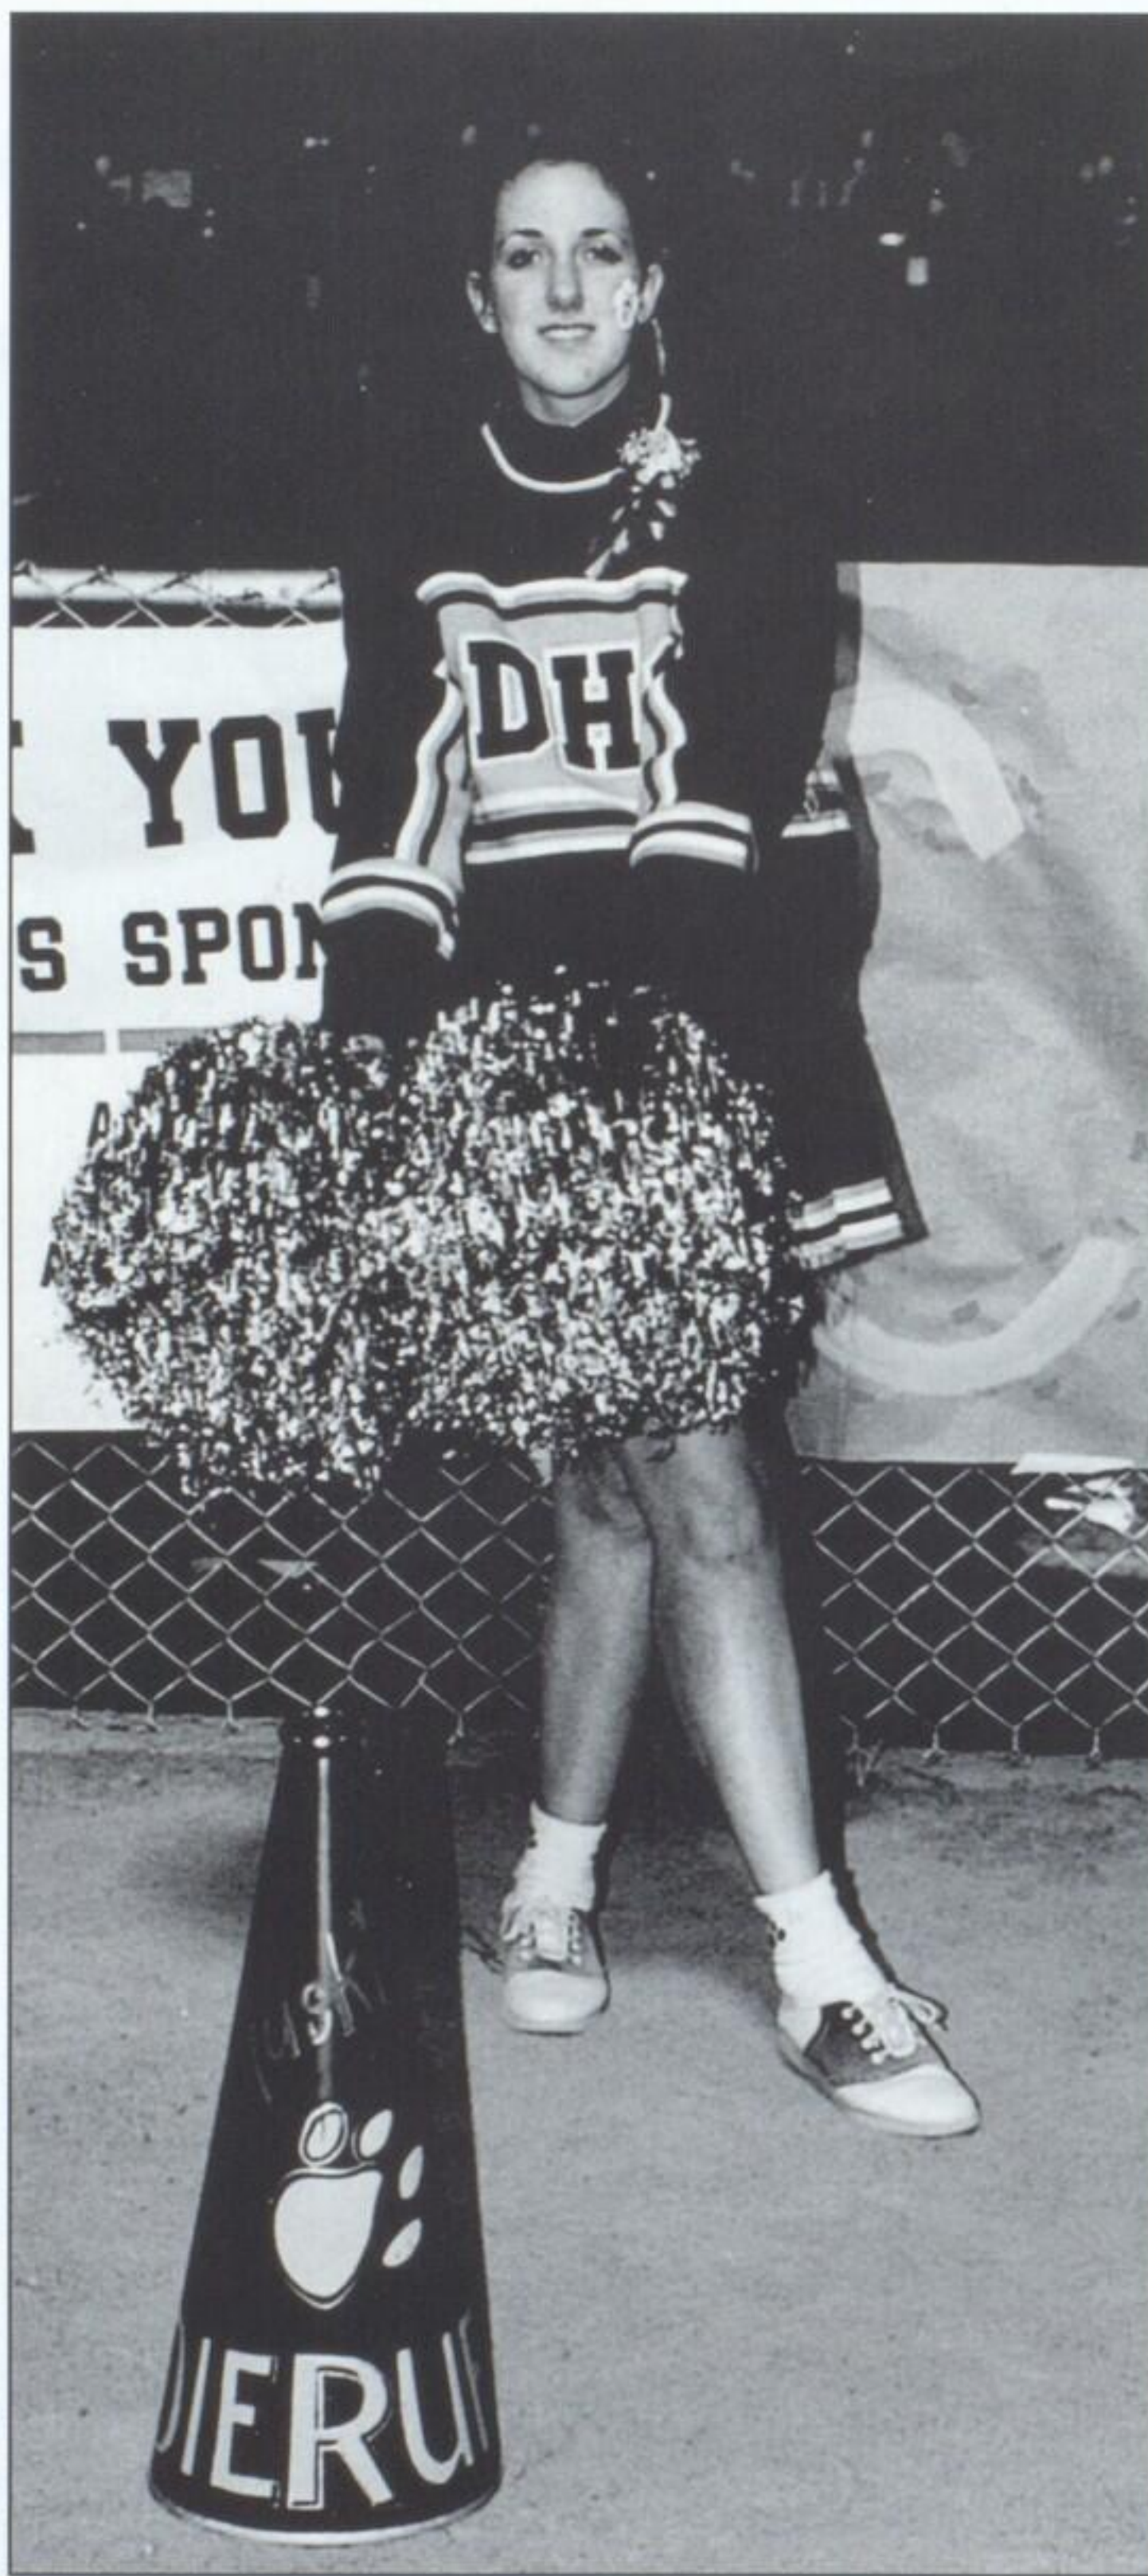

(Top) Torn and Broken. Sophomore Richard "Farmer" Ocelus is in agony from his first quarter broken collar bone. Ocelus waited in excruciating pain before going to the ER, a measure of a true athlete.

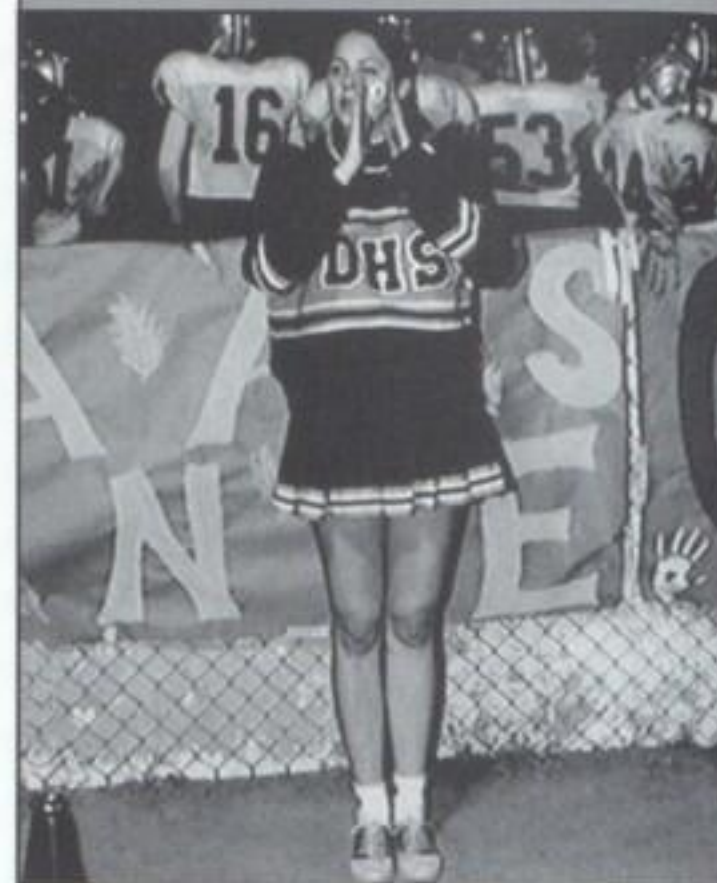

(Left) Plug it Up. Senior Josh Feist has to wrestle with a cotton plug in his nose. The trainer had to stop Feist's nose from bleeding all over the mats. The "blood clock" ran out of time and the wrestler was then required to wear a face mask. Most wrestlers continued to wrestle even though the mask was uncomfortable and sometimes even blocked their view of the opponent.

"We always get the crowd going with the cheer 'Let's Get Fired Up,'" exclaimed Junior Shannin Crone. The varsity cheerleaders made the crowds go wild at the school's football games, basketball games, and wrestling matches. They also psyched up the entire school during their explosive pep-rally performances.

Tryouts for the team were held at the Dieruff gymnasium the previous March, and the girls who made the squad practiced throughout the summer. The varsity squad attended the UCA summer overnight camp at Allentown College where the girls were given a chance to shape up their skills.

The squad consisted of seven seniors, four juniors, and one sophomore and was led by senior co-captains Jana Bresinger and Jill Kuti. "Along with being a captain comes a lot of responsibility, and you have to have leadership qualities. It was hard work making sure everything went along as planned, but in the end you realize it was all worth it," commented Kuti.

When not cheering at a sporting event, the girls were often busy with many other activities. They participated in parades, booster club activities, and a handful of other local events. These girls showed us all that cheerleading, like any other sport, is a lot of hard work and dedication.

When asked about what she'd miss most about being a Husky cheerleader, Senior Steph Riga replied, "The experience, the friendships, and the spirit."

Down 21-0 at halftime against Allen, most Husky fans were ready to pack it in and give up. Coming into the game, their Huskies were 0-9, and things did not look like they were getting any better. So, at halftime, the Huskies took to the locker room wondering what they could do to turn the game around. Senior Dale Martrich commented, "Coming out of halftime we knew we had to get everyone pumped so we could bring a 'W' back to the East Side."

The Huskies flew out of the gate in the third quarter. Senior Marqus Holland capitalized on one of Allen's five turnovers and scored on a TD pass from Freshman Josh Hinkle.

That touchdown started what could have been the most memorable comeback in Dieruff-Allen football history. The Huskies scored twice more, late in the 4th quarter, to knot the game at 21-21 heading into overtime.

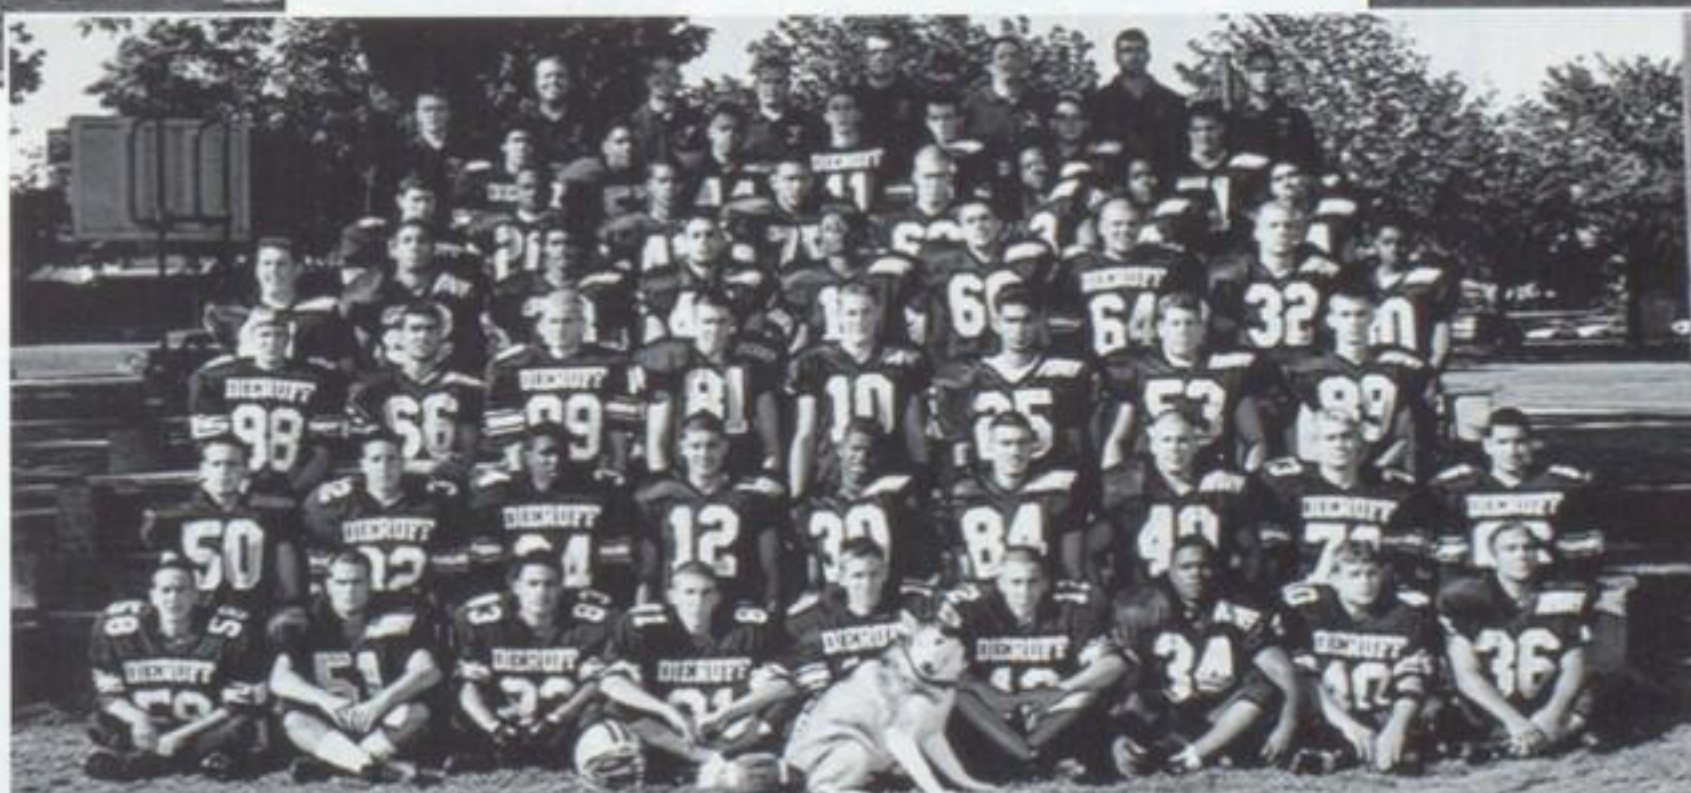

"The greatest thing about our season is that it's one that both the students and the players will remember forever."

In OT the Huskies wasted no time scoring on their first play from scrimmage when Sophomore Joel Rupp caught a ten yard TD pass from Hinkle.

The Huskies defense held strong on the first three plays in OT pinning Allen to a fourth and one situation on the one yard line. Allen's quarterback tried a QB sneak, but the defensive line got the job done and stopped them short of the end zone. "It was all heart baby," stated Senior Jesse Glass. The stadium erupted and the fans rushed onto the field, ready to celebrate the long awaited victory with their Huskies. Sports Editor: Tom Leauber

"Never saying die, never giving up, and working hard in whatever you do, whether in the classroom or on the field" was what Husky Pride meant to junior varsity head coach Andy Bashore. In his third year of coaching at DHS, the 2000 season marked his opening year as a head coach. Both Bashore's high school football experience and his desire to work with kids influenced his goal to become a football coach himself. Mr. Bashore's off-field responsibilities at Husky High included advising student council and teaching a full load of Social Studies classes.

Coach Bashore had pride in his team, and he firmly believed their record of 1-8 was not a true reflection of his athletes' dedication. Bashore's plans to improve his football team for their future seasons included off-season weight training in hopes of taking his players to their fullest potential.

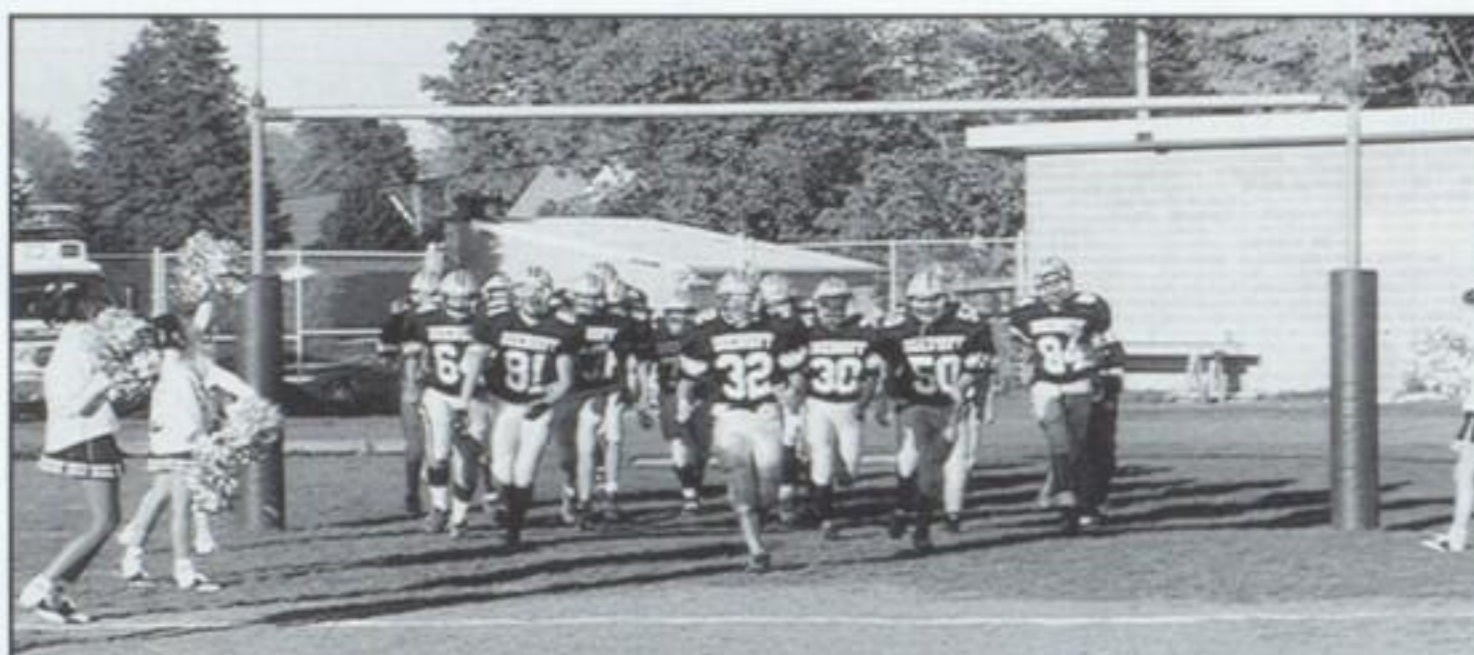

A typical JV practice started with a stretch and ended with pointers for the next game. Sophomore Joel Rupp, one of four captains for the team, was named most valuable player. The other three captains, Sophomores Tommy Seddon, Lou Nagy, and Freshman Josh Hinkle, planned on continuing their football careers with the Huskies and were looking forward to promising upcoming seasons.

The freshmen football team finished out their season at 4-5. Even though the team had five losses, it had four hard-earned wins.

Their best games were against Blue Mountain and Becahi. Both games were nail-biters and came down to the last second. The team was led by captains Jason Troxell, Andrew Mann, Justin Nischan, and Doug Fritchman. Freshmen football's new head coach was William Burch, a Dieruff math teacher and Husky alumni. His assistants were Coach Mercado, who coached the offensive and defensive lines; Coach Clark, who coached running backs and defensive backs; and Coach Schmidt, who coached wide receivers and special teams. The coaches and players taught each other. From helping each other, talents reached their full potential, and performances improved with each game. The team's best strength was its unity, and by the end of the year they were a team. "I could see us coming together as the season progressed," commented Burch. "That teamwork helped us come through in the close games."

The Huskies ended their season with a record of 1-18-1. "Despite the fact we didn't win a lot of games, we remained competitive. Our schedule was extremely hard with ten of our sixteen opponents qualifying for districts," stated Coach Blose.

Blose commented, "Junior Amber Feist made second team EPC and was the most consistent player on the team. A lot of players were continually asked to try out different positions and many excelled at each. Sophomores Jenna DeLong, Sara Snyder, and Senior Denise Penrose were the strong suits on defense. Offensively, Lisa Plessl's stickwork was incredible combined with the speed of Lindsay Myers and Kaysia Thomas." The team planned on entering some of the indoor field hockey competitions over the winter and possibly joining some summer leagues. To get the team prepared for each game Blose had a ritual that consisted of inspiring stories and quotes. "This was undoubtedly the best group of girls I have ever coached. The personalities that came together to make this team were incredible! Between the hard-working attitude from the captains and my classic clowns, Ashley Barrlow, Janna Moyer, and Lindsay Myers, who were always pulling stunts, they all made this season one I'll never forget," stated Blose.

The rebuilding process for the Dieruff soccer team began with the addition of new head coach Luis Ramirez and the return of most of the varsity roster. The soccer team had a large turnout of players and launched its 2000 season with a victory over Nazareth. "Winning the first game sets the mood for the rest of the season," stated senior fullback Kenny Eck. It was the first time the Dieruff soccer team won a season opener in many years.

With a combination of fast, agile offense and a solid unforgiving defense, the formidable Huskies were able to accomplish athletic feats that were unimaginable in the past. The team gave 100% in all the games and caused many upsets in the EPC. The Huskies finished the season with four victories and two ties. One of the victories was against Dieruff's crosstown rival, Allen. "This was the game we wanted the most all season," said goalie Greg Laird, who put up a shutout against the Canaries. "This game meant the most to the seniors because it was our last home game, and the win just made it sweeter," Laird continued.

BUMP, SET, SPIKE, WIN! "A person should know how to pass well, set decently, spike the ball from all spots on the court, and have a really good attitude on the court at all times," Coach Neff explained, describing a strong volleyball player.

The record for the volleyball team was 4-17. Coach Chad Neff's team was disappointed in the first half of the season because of the series of losses, but the second half of the season was much better. "The toughest loss of the season was Allen at home. The winning point was decided by a bad call from the officials. But, the sweetest victory this year was against Pleasant Valley. Dieruff's past teams were not able to beat them, and we won against them on their senior night," continued Neff.

"As a co-captain I think this season became more of a learning experience, as far as dedication, ability, and leadership. Our team went through a lot of difficulty and hard times, but we pulled together and came through. I learned that attitude means everything and that a lot can happen when a player keeps her head high," Senior Christina Thor commented. Thor was one of the strongest players on the team, along with Senior Jodi Wasco and Junior Taren Weidaw. These were the three returning varsity players from the previous season.

"As a co-captain I think this season could have been better. I think our team was able and should have beat a lot of teams that we lost to. We went through a lot of tough times together and some very enthusiastic times together. At times I think we gave up in games and then we also gave it our all. I think the team learned what we could achieve if we always had our heads in the game and helped each other all the time," Jodi Wasco explained.

"We had younger girls learning and improving their skills and new people working together as a team," Neff said. "The size of our team this year was a big disadvantage. If we put four or five inches on some of our players this season I think we could have been really good. The tallest girls that we had on our team this year were inexperienced," explained Neff.

Every year two girls were picked to join the All-Star game. The EPC district and other districts were represented in this event. Seniors Jodi Wasco and Christina Thor were the two chosen from LED.

Cross country mostly participated in invitational meets. Occasionally, the team entered meets in Lehigh Parkway. They worked hard and tried to make Dieruff's team the best.

Athletes prepared mentally with a focus on their individual goals while still keeping the welfare of the team high on the priority list.

Coach Jim Moniz always thought tennis was a great and skilled sport. He believed agility and speed were needed in this sport. Moniz wanted to be a coach because he wanted to teach kids about the game so that they could enjoy it for the rest of their lives.

The first two weeks before the season began, the team practiced, and once the matches started, they practiced once or twice a week. Most kids did practice a lot because they wanted to do well. They practiced in the off seasons, winters and summers, and when the seasons came, they were in good shape and ready to play. Moniz prepared the team for a big game by trying to get the team focused on the ball while hitting their shots so that when they were in control they could identify where the ball was going. If his players anticipated a shot, they had a better chance of succeeding, believed Moniz.

Moniz also told jokes or horsed around to keep the team loose so that they could focus on the ball and hit it cleanly. Sometimes he tried to pump up the team by focusing on their strengths as a team.

"The most memorable part of this year's season was the second Allen game because it felt great to upset our crosstown rivals."

Rachel Gross

Coach Moniz thought that the most outgoing players were the #1 Becky Deringer and #2 Renae Dalrymple. Moniz stated, "Renae is a very outgoing kid who keeps things in perspective. She is a great second year player."

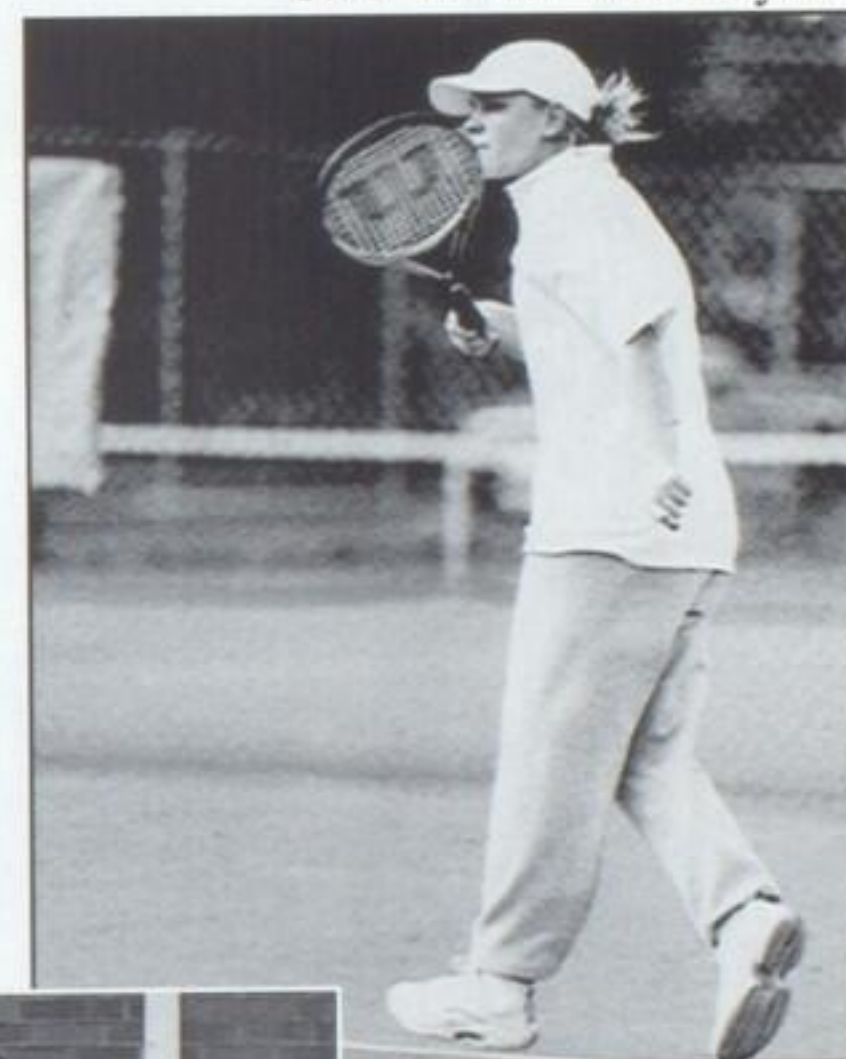

According to Moniz the team's best player was Becky Deringer, who hit a Dieruff record with eleven wins. "I'm hoping that my success at DHS will help me in earning a single seat at Moravian."

Coach Moniz concluded, "The kids at Dieruff are always willing to put the effort in. They are easy-going, they like to have fun, and they do not mind hard work. They are enjoyable and really get involved in activities."

Coach Molotzak, who also taught math, believed that golf was an individual sport, and in order for a golfer to get himself ready for a game, one had to have a “never-give-up attitude.”

The varsity Husky boys basketball team may not have started the season off on a good note, but they sure ended with sweet success. Although they did not qualify for District 11 play, the Huskies proved they could play and contend with anyone in the East Penn Conference. "We didn't recover from Anthony Ross' graduation. Also, we had one of the hardest schedules in the East Penn Conference," stated "Hall of Fame" statistician Roy Arlotto.

The beginning of the season seemed to be tough for the Huskies, but they came back from adversity winning three straight games in a row. "Our schedule consisted of six games in nine nights, and two games in eleven nights. It's tough to get back in rhythm after a lay-off," stated Arlotto.

Losing only a few seniors, the foundation would remain strong and the future of this basketball team looked very bright and open. The team's leading scorers were Seniors Jerome Falwell and Marqus Holland, along with Princeton Ross.

These Dieruff ballers tried with all of their might to keep their season alive, but they fell short when they lost games against Central Catholic and Bethlehem Catholic.

With a record of 10-11, the junior varsity boys basketball team had an outstanding year. By practicing every day after school with coach Joe Jarjous, the JV team learned different plays and many strategies that helped them win their games. The junior varsity girls basketball team proved to be the East Side that Dieruff girls basketball has not missed a beat when it came to Husky Pride. Despite a record of 5-15 the girls had an outstanding year. They started off slow, but as the season continued their improvement was extremely noticeable.

At the helm of the team was first year coach Adrienne Palmer. Coach Palmer always motivated the girls, teaching them to play hard and to never give up. "Since it was her first year and it was our first year with her, we all learned from each other," stated Freshman Guard Yalexia Lopez. Palmer's teaching methods proved to be a success. Toward the end of the season the girls kept piling on the wins, making the season one to remember for both the coach and the players.

Leading the Husky girls both offensively and defensively were Sophomores Theresa Carroll and Nancy Carwell. Carwell mainly thrashed the opposition with her outside game, while Carroll worked the boards and headed up a tough Husky defense. Freshmen La'Toya Blake and Jaime Leauber also helped to give the opposition a few headaches, scoring from both inside the paint and out around the perimeter. "I think that as the season progressed we started to work better as a team," commented Carwell.

With all of their successes and all of the upcoming talent, it's safe to say that the Husky girls basketball team kept the pride alive.

Losing four of their best middle weights the previous year, the Husky wrestlers had a hard road ahead of them. The team would have to fight hard for the EPC crown, and early on they seemed up for the challenge.

With five straight wins going into the Whitehall duals, the Huskies seemed unstoppable, until they went 2-4 in the next six matches. Losing a match to Becahi that could have cost them the title, would the Huskies be able to bounce back? Leading the way were Senior captains Josh Feist, Brett Giandomenico, and Chad Werkheiser. Freshman Rikki Bass also played an important role in keeping the team afloat. With a combined record of 69-23, these four wrestlers rose to the challenge and brought the team back to the top. The Huskies finished with a record of 14-6, ending as tri-champions with an impressive win over Pottsville. At the end of the match, thirteen-year coach of the Huskies Glenn Whiteman announced his retirement. Whiteman had a career record of 135-111-1 and stated this, "Over the 13 years I owe a lot of my success to the fine assistant coaches I've had over the years."

having over .500 records, the team looked set for a few district place winners. Coach Whiteman already had sent 33 grapplers to regionals. At the end of the night, the Huskies were sending four wrestlers to regionals. Senior Chad Werkheiser, Junior Andrew Sallit, and Freshman Rikki Bass all placed fifth at districts, and Senior Danny Odom (sixth place) were on their way to regionals.

At the closing of another winning season for the Husky grapplers and the end of a great coach's career; what did the Huskies have to look forward to? Seven returning varsity wrestlers and high hopes of winning a future EPC title.

The JV wrestling team consisted of only eight wrestlers, yet they did not seem to have a problem winning. They won the EPC with an outstanding record of 5-0. Andy Mann, a freshman, was brought up to junior varsity, and even though he was young he packed a powerful punch. Andy may have only mastered a few moves, but when he used them...watch out! Flying-cement-job was his favorite move, and he used it as a deadly weapon on the mat. Andy was not the only young wrestler on the team who proved his worth.

In his second year of wrestling, Senior Billy Strauss proved he was worthy. He wrestled a few matches on the varsity level and the rest on junior varsity. Billy's few matches on varsity gave him enough experience to roll over the competition on the junior varsity level. By the end of the year the team whittled down to approximately five wrestlers because of injuries and Freshman Andy Mann moving up to the varsity squad.

These young grapplers never gave up, and they finished the year with one of the best junior varsity records in Dieruff history. "The varsity has a lot of talent coming up next year from this young JV team, and I'm looking forward to coaching these fine wrestlers," stated Coach Enriquez.

Swimmers, take your mark, get set, go! The Husky swimmers accomplished something that few Dieruff swim teams in the past had been able to accomplish - a boatload of wins and a broken record. Senior swimmer Jenn Nonnemacher broke the record by clocking in at a time of 6:08.12, swimming in the 500- meter freestyle. "I was very proud that I broke the record because it shows that all of my hard work has paid off," Jenn stated.

Coaching the team was Mr. David Roberts, Mr. Jeff Matyus, and Mr. Mark Manley. They coached the team to the most wins it's seen in the last seven years. Though the team was losing some key swimmers, Roberts hoped that the leadership they were given would provide a path for the upcoming swimmers to follow. "If everyone comes back, we should have a strong nucleus for the team next year," Roberts optimistically stated.

The team was led by captains Jenn Nonnemacher, Sara Snyder, Ryan Griffiths, and Billy Anthony. "It was a big responsibility, but I was honored to be a captain," commented Griffiths.

The captains were crucial in the steady improvement of the team, making sure everyone did what he or she was supposed to do to get better.

The Husky swimmers of 2000-2001 laid down a solid foundation, working hard in both the off-season and the regular season. They were a perfect example of the statement "Practice makes perfect," and they hoped that the swim teams in Dieruff's future would follow in their footsteps. Coach Roberts hoped that future swimmers would learn from this team's hard work and success.

"Activities at Dieruff were very important because they put responsibility on students and force them to take positive actions," related Junior Tylynn Torres, regarding her involvement in school activities.

Whether it was to help the local community by participating in the Key Club or SADD, by keeping yourself in shape by joining the ski or weight-lifting clubs, or by advancing your social and academic possibilities by becoming a student council member, Dieruff students definitely took advantage of each avenue open to them.

Not only did activities enable students to feel a sense of pride and accomplishment in their school as a whole, but it also allowed unique friendships to grow.

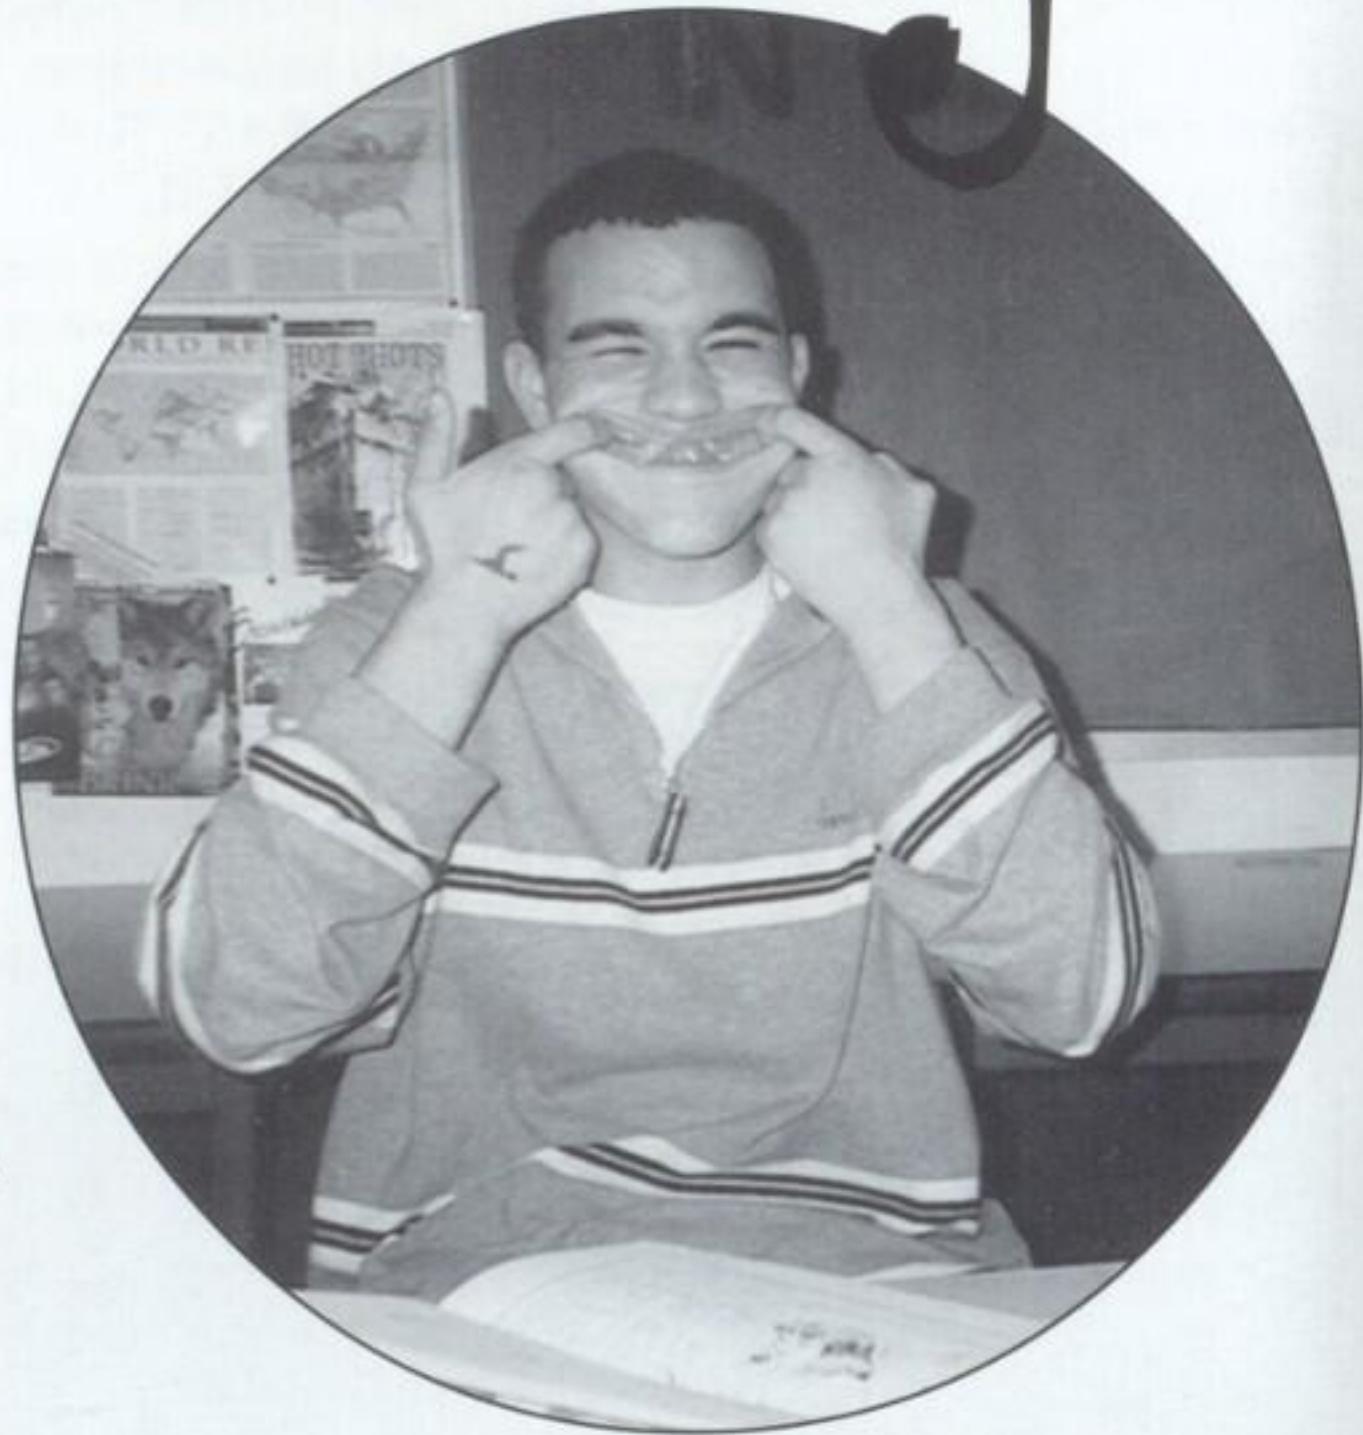

Activities also helped L.E.D. students focus in on some of their favorite endeavors. Junior Waad Hadid expressed her delight in being involved in school activities. "My favorite activity is yearbook because I enjoy writing articles. It gives me the experience I need for my selected future career in journalism."

Always bearing in mind that graduation was closer than it appeared, the activities Dieruff students were involved in helped guide them in making specific decisions in connection with college choices, career goals, and life in general.

The Husky marching band consisted of fifty playing members. They participated in four competitions throughout the fall marching season. The band also performed at every football game. Featured songs included Mr. Roboto, Hush, and Tusk, which showcased the Dieruff bandfront.

The bandfront consisted of nine members. The girls performed routines with either flags or batons. Not only did the band and bandfront put on a halftime show, but they also played songs in the stand to pep up the fans and football team.

Performing with the marching band took a lot of hard work, determination, and dedication. The marching Huskies practiced every morning during first period and for two hours after school on Mondays and Wednesdays.

"The school needs to appreciate band. We are at every single football game, showing our enthusiastic support no matter what the score. Band is fun, challenging, educational, and very under-appreciated. Being in the band is the best thing that ever happened to me, and people need to realize the importance of music," stated band member, Allison Fandl. Editor: Cindy Walter

The Right Way to Start a Day. Mrs. Gillens's first period choir class starts the day by singing in preparation for the winter concert.

Mrs. Gillen, director of Dieruff's choir, accomplished many of her goals even though she had a very busy schedule in 2001. Somehow she managed teaching at Dieruff High in the mornings, Ritter Elementary in the afternoons, and Midway Manor into the evenings. Even though her time was short and precious, she still managed to organize two performances and a field trip at Husky High. "We have a lot of talent this year. Everyone enjoys working with each other," quoted choir president Renae Dalrymple.

The Dieruff choir consisted of 50 enthusiastic students who enjoyed the art of singing and performing. Some of the songs performed by students were "Music of My Heart," "Somewhere Out There," and "Stand By Me." Mrs. Gillen conducted while the choir sang to live and instrumental recordings.

Choir members experienced the Broadway show Aida in New York in March of 2001. Most of the music in Aida was composed by Elton John.

On October 28, 2000 at 7:00 PM, Dieruff's own Dungeon of Doom Haunted House opened. The Husky Masks, our drama club, planned for the event for two months. The project required more work than many organizers and patrons may have initially realized. "The haunted house was probably the funniest thing I participated in," stated Senior thespian Christian Ortiz.

The early spring public production, Date With a Vampire, was a trip to England's gothic setting. The inside of an old castle served as the main backdrop on stage. The Husky Masks practiced three to four days a week for at least three hours.

Opening night was planned for Friday, February 23, 2001, but a surprise snowstorm closed schools, and the production began on Saturday. A third night was rescheduled for Thursday, March 1, 2001.

Mr. Roy Arlotto had been the advisor for the stage crew for over thirty years and he still loved working behind the curtain. "It's always a challenge," he stated. Together, he and members of the stage crew took on the responsibilities of setting up programs that took place in our auditorium.

A tremendous amount of time and effort was involved in teaching students how to maneuver the different lighting and sets. "Doing things right and on time is always our main focus. You never have a second chance," Arlotto continued.

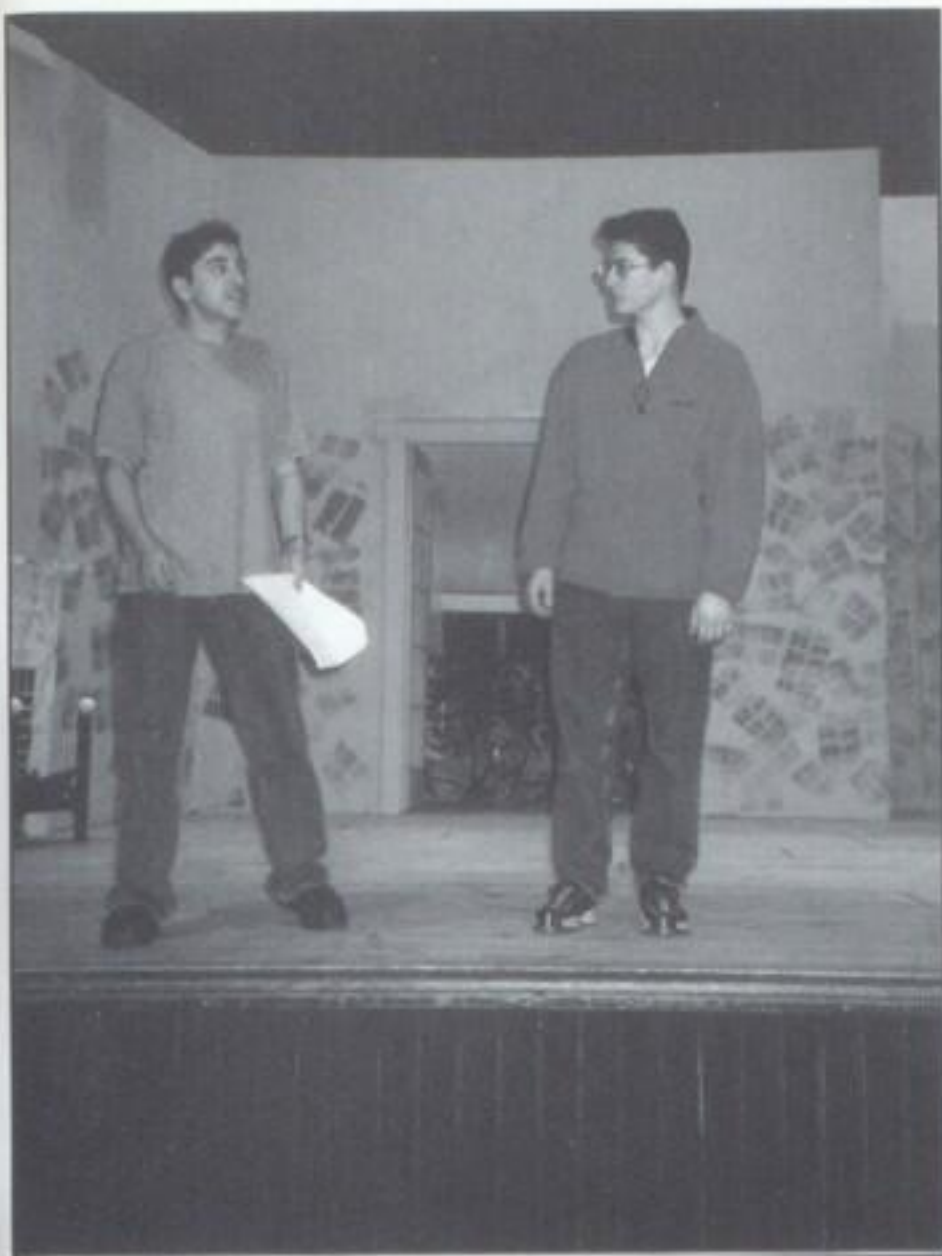

The stage crew consisted of approximately ten members and varied from show to show. "The people in the show appreciate their hard work and dedication, but the audience usually is not aware of the necessary work behind the scenes," concluded Arlotto.

The debate team worked with two resolves this year: "The United States government should enact legislature to regulate and restrict media violence," and "The federal government should increase the protection of privacy in search and seizures." These debates were held at area high schools such as Catasauqua, Salisbury, Parkland, and Dieruff. "We have four debate meets, but in each meet we debate twice, making a total of eight matches in the regular season," Senior debater Nancy Atiyeh explained. One of the team's goals was to master the art of intellectual arguing, efficiently using research and statements by opposing teams.

The debate team met every Monday after school for two hours and on Friday mornings at 7:15 for practice. "Debates allow students to use their public speaking skills to learn how to take a stand supported with factual information, even though they may not support it personally," continued Atiyeh.

Have you ever seen a Scholastic Scrimmage match on your TV at home? If you have, it was easy to see that these teens were a cut above the rest, but how many of you knew it did not end on TV?

Once a student was on this academic team, he had to commit to a weekly practice the entire year. The team constantly prepared for competitions held throughout the year with other area high schools.

The scholastic scrimmage team held mock competitions with Lampier Strasburg for prizes at practice. "Our JV scrimmage team received runner-up honors at the Lehigh Valley Olympics of the Mind," commented Mrs. Lucia Levan, advisor. The team also finished tied for fifth place at the Pennsylvania Academic Regional competition.

Students departed from Dieruff around 3:15 and returned from Blue Mountain around 9:15.

The prices for skiing and snowboarding varied anywhere between $26-$35. Mr. Csensits, math teacher, and administrative intern Mrs. Wiley co-advised the 2001 ski club. It helps build student leadership skills and also gives me an opportunity to work with top-notch students," commented advisor Andy Bashore.

Student council members met two times a month and the executive board met four times a month. "We discuss pep rally plans, spirit week, Snowball, and Teacher Appreciation Day," stated Bashore. "Our goal this year was to increase membership with the underclassmen, and we achieved this goal," continued Mr. Bashore.

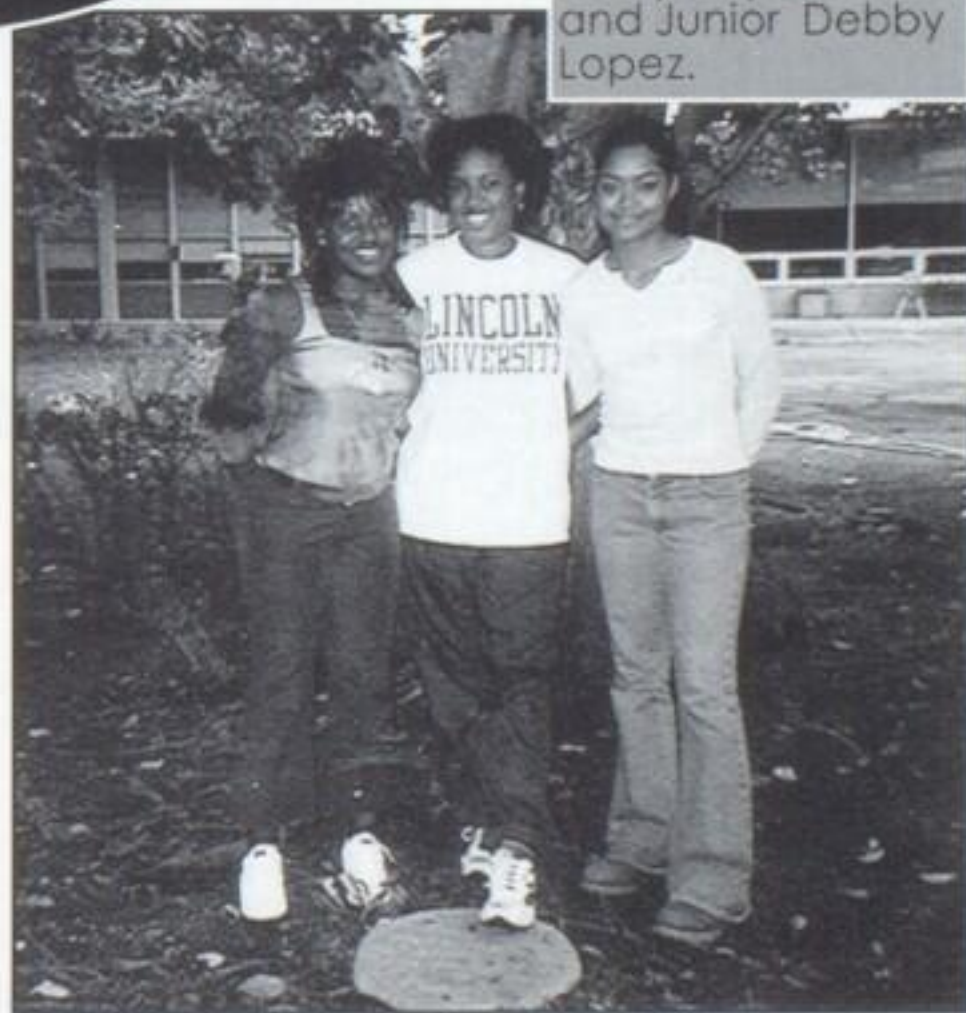

The two biggest and most time-consuming events were the planning and the setting up of the Snowball and pep rally.

"Some people have complaints about our step team, but we're all about just having fun," stated Freshman Toya Blake. The step team practiced regularly on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays from 3:20 to 4:45. Occasionally, extra practice was needed before a big performance.

The team showcased their talent to the student body at the annual spirit week pep rally. "Dieruff students really look forward to step team performances," commented Sophomore Lyrica Martin.

Kutztown Alliance was a five year partnership program between the Allentown School District and Kutztown University. Students participated in field trips, activities, cultural and sporting events, and campus visits. Students in Kutztown Alliance also attended financial aid workshops. KUA members were also offered a speech course in eleventh grade for which they could earn college credit.

Advisor Mrs. Schnalzer commented, "The students in the Kutztown Alliance program are excellent, motivated, young people who, through their participation in the program, are making an investment in their future." If a student completed five years of being a member, he was eligible for a thousand dollar scholarship for Kutztown University.

Junior class Vice-President Mike Kadas stated "I enjoy being an officer because I get to make a difference and have a say in what goes on during the year." The underclassmen officers' main goal was to raise money for their senior year expenses such as the prom and a color section in the yearbook. The senior class sold T-shirts and sold Halloween candy bags. The junior class planned a Valentine's Day Dance, and the sophomore class organized the Husky Pride booth, all in an effort to raise money. Sophomore secretary Mary Toumeh commented, "We all put our ideas together and make plans to do things."

Officers also voiced their fellow classmates' opinions at class meetings held before and after school.

The main focus of Connections was to spread a drug-free message to grade school students throughout the Allentown School District. The members of Connections would put on skits and play games directed to lead the grade school students to a drug-free life. Senior Nolan Zambelli stated, "Bringing the strong message of drug abuse into situations that the young students understand was a challenge, but our efforts were rewarded with the feedback from the class and the staff at the local middle school."

(above) Listen Up. Key Club Members Shaza Toumeh, Lauren Ammary, and Kristina Azar listen to future community service projects that key club members will have to take part in.

The purpose of Key Club was to allow the students to become actively involved with community service projects. There were thirty active members who were able to successfully participate in several different community activities.

Key clubbers raised $425 for the Cystic Fibrosis foundation through a bowl-a-thon, held at Boulevard Lanes on November 12, 2000. They also volunteered time serving and visiting with residents at the Good Shepherd Home, and every year members helped serve an Easter dinner to the homeless at the Salvation Army. Service to community was the main priority for club members.

Meetings were held in room 153, two times a month. Officers included President Denise Georges, Vice President Resam Tabchi, Treasurer Deanna Shetayh, and Secretary Nicole Al-Amm.

Advisor Mr. Rosenberger, science teacher, stated, "I love being advisor because it gives me a chance to work with kids outside of the classroom."

The school store was the hot spot to go if you had the munchies. It was open after homeroom and after second period. According to school store worker, Junior Morningstar Trevino, "The best selling items are Twix and Pizza Combos." All snacks were 50 cents except for Nestle Flips, which were 75 cents and lollipops, which were 25 cents.

If students were interested in joining the school store crew, they had to express interest to workers or advisor and business teacher Mrs. Kopcho. Sequoyah Thomas commented, "Sometimes it gets crowded and I get frustrated, but I deal with it because I like working in the school store."

Production Pandemonium!

Journalism Jam.

Planning the yearbook was not as easy as it may have looked. In fact, layouts, coordinating graphics, feature story topics, and even the theme was created six months before the current school year even started. The Ledannus editors and staff members voted on the theme, Closer Than It Appears, in April of 2000.

While choosing fonts, page layouts, and candid photos, the yearbook editors wanted to cover spring sports, which would be difficult in a spring-delivery book. The staff realized it had to focus on underclassmen of the previous year since the seniors would be alumni when the next book was released thirteen months later.

Another first for the yearbook was designing the book with various 3-D pictures, including the cover. "Taking the 3-D pictures was a huge ordeal," commented yearbook advisor Mrs. Bocian. The staff contracted professional photographer Mark Huff from Davor Photography to coordinate the photo shoot. "Our student editors worked long and hard putting our 3-D project together. No other yearbook in the country has attempted this. The only other publication we know of that pulled this off was Sports Illustrated. We're in good company!" Bocian continued. Another challenge was locating 3-D glasses for purchase at a reasonable price, and with the help of the internet, this was possible.

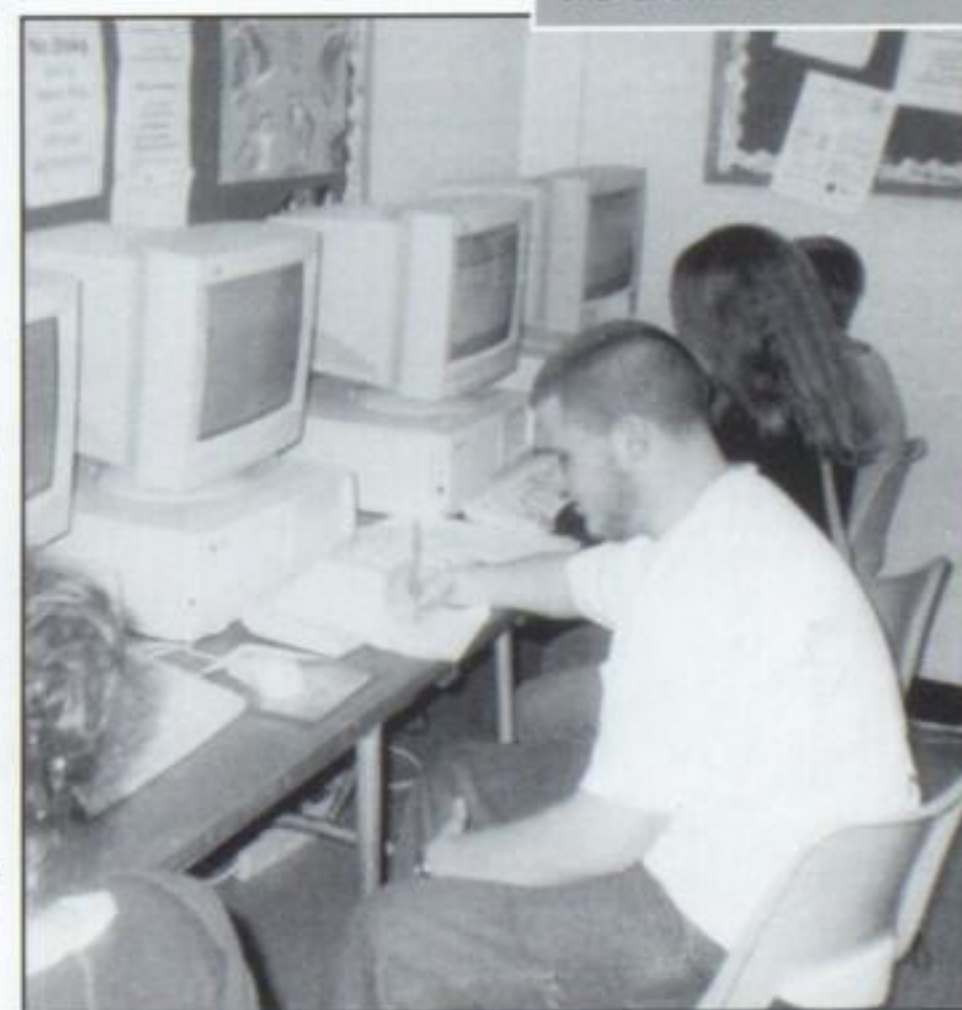

As usual, the yearbook editors and staff went the extra mile by coming to school in the evenings, on the weekends, and during teacher in-service days to ensure the yearbook's on-time publication.

Staff Writer: Amber Feist

The journalism staff of 32 students, including editors, business crew, photographers, and writers, worked diligently to take the school newspaper into the digital world. "It's difficult for the staff to adjust. The editors have to keep pushing them to do their work," said Miss Schappel, The Leader's advisor. Their biggest challenge was learning to use the new software program, PageMaker. Schappell continued, "We like the new software, but production will go even more smoothly when everyone on staff learns how to use it."

The task editors worried about the most was getting staff writers to hand their articles in on time with corrections. Proofreading was a never-ending job for this group of students. When articles were published for school-wide and community circulation, errors must be caught and corrected before it's off to print. The Leader was published four times a year, and each issue was more exciting than the previous one.

The Dieruff school board representatives met every first of the month to discuss policy changes and educational factors. Student representatives Nancy Atiyeh and Jason Awad were often asked their opinions in these matters. School Council was chaired by Mrs. Sabo and parent Mrs. Deringer. Student representatives were nominated by Mr. Bashore and Mrs. Sabo to be the voice of the school at school council meetings.

Junior Taren Weidaw represented the students of Dieruff by attending monthly school board meetings. She acted as the liaison between DHS and the board.

Staff Writer: Jason Awad

The main focus of Student Forum was for involved students to get a broad view of different high schools and the differences between them. Students participated in a variety of activities while at these events.

"It's a great way to meet other students from other schools," commented student forum member Anny Luong. Dieruff student forum members met once a month to attend conferences.

The science club was filled with new members, and that meant fresh minds with creativity and a love for science. There were ten members in the club.

Mr. Landis served his twenty-first year as the science club advisor. Science club was designed to teach students that there was a fun way to understand the different dimensions of science.

The club was involved in such activities as Apple Cupid and Physics Night. Members used the money they earned for their trip to Boston.

(Below) Watch Your Step. Mr. Landis demonstrates the principles of free-fall and displacement during Physics Night.

The 8th annual Snowball had some amendments to the traditional semi-formal. Unlike other years, tickets were reserved in the morning of November 15, 2000 for seniors only. By the afternoon, tickets could be purchased by both seniors and juniors. The remainder of the tickets could be bought by anyone, but the 250 tickets were sold out more quickly than anticipated.

Since the student council had greater funds, the decorations were more elaborate than in years before. The wooden bridge was replaced with an archway decorated with cloud gossamer, balloons, and metallic stars, which were bought especially for the theme, Winter Wonderland. The entire ceiling was completely covered with blue and white gossamer as opposed to the previous year where only part of the ceiling was decorated. The traditional icicle lights still lit up the dance floor as it did before. Clouds and stars were painted on the windows to give the effect of being in a dream.

All these decorations were put up by a select few from student council. These dedicated students put in more than thirty after-school hours of their time into this project. When asked about the obstacles of preparing for the dance, president of student council, Senior Jodi Wasco replied, "The hardest thing was working with conflicting after-school schedules of the volunteers. Also, there were times when there were inexperienced underclassmen helpers who needed aid from veteran student council members."

The night was perfect, except for the incident when two pieces of gossamer fell from the ceiling and needed to be cut. Despite this happening, everyone had a wonderful time in Dieruff's Winter Wonderland.

Seniors Nancy Atiyeh, Becky Deringer, Nicole Troxell, Christina Thor, Diana Aoun, and Christina Staudt take snapshots before they get on the dance floor. Taking pictures was a way to "freeze time" and create memories with your closest friends.

Appearing on

Various students supported and became involved with their community during the school term. Students participated in numerous activities at East Side Youth Center, which included wrestling, baseball, softball, girls and boys basketball, soccer, and cheerleading. ESYC prepared young Huskies to eventually grow into DHS Huskies. These sporting events helped to keep the community alive and united, supporting favorite teams and encouraging children.

Students continued to stay involved in their community, which allowed them to become more responsible. Many Dieruff students took on responsibilities by having part time jobs, which required many teens to become efficient in organization and time management skills. Students had many options when it came to getting a job. Union Boulevard offered many types of jobs for everyone's interests and schedule demands. The Lehigh Valley Mall also offered opportunities in retail.

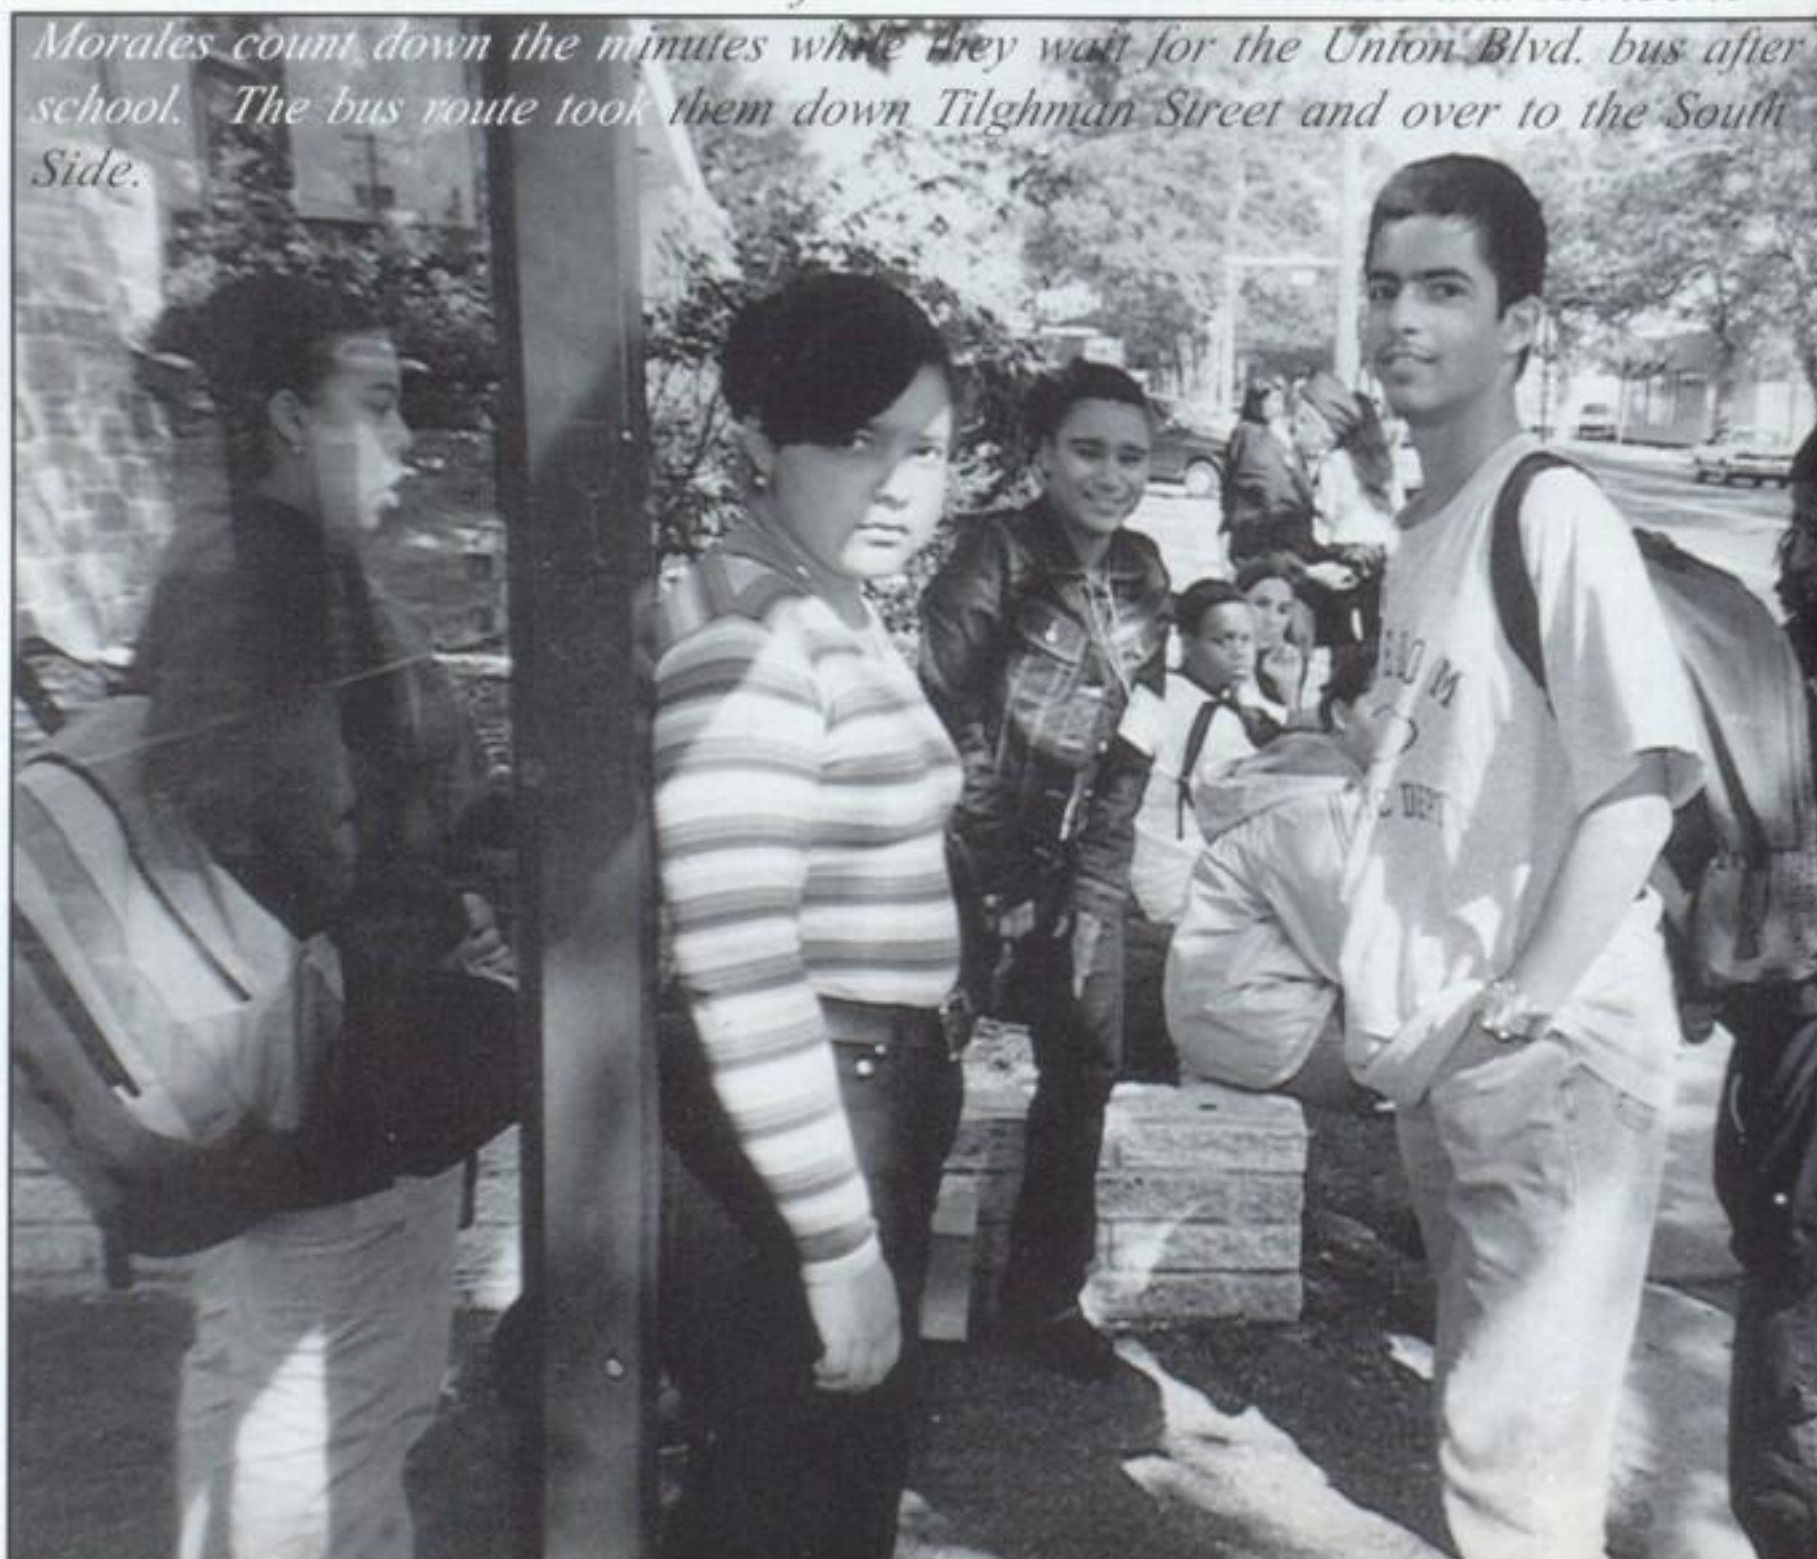

Whether it was out working or even volunteering, Dieruff students were always involved in events and organizations outside of school.

Congratulations to the Class of 2001

Throughout our high school years,
You were there to erase our fears.
Through thick and thin, our friendships will last,
even after senior year has passed.
Don't forget the fun times in class,
Or the time Greg was cut by glass,
Remember when Diana thought she was shot,
Or last minute studying more often than not.
Engraved in our minds is the time Lucy received 50
carnations,
And Dan's movie of Sam Leh, robot investigations.
Staudt and her sassy ways,
The anticipation for chicken turnover days,
And learning that sucking up really pays
We're just the minor things that made up our Dieruff days.
How about our first official Dieruff-Allen football game?

Lucy Safi & Rhonda Dergham

Marie Rudzinski and Renae Dalrymple

Or, the day everyone wore red shirts, all looking the same?
Remember the time we learned about Mr.
Bilder's Law?
Or, the time we hid from
Ms. Shaw?
Remember the time
Desiree's and Marie's purses were switched?
We never thought we would leave this school,
Rid of all the ID and lunch room rules.
As we bid farewell in our last year,
We try to hold back our tears.
We realized that it went by so fast,
Everyday hoping that these friendships will always last.

Christina Staudt

The greatest gift a child can give a parent is for her to achieve her dreams. Christina, you have truly made us proud. You have continually held yourself to high standards which have gained the respect of your brother and sisters. Christina, you are one of the greatest successes we have had in our lives. Your total commitment and unlimited potential insures you of achieving all you set out to do. Remember, along with your accomplishments will come increasing responsibility. It is not what you achieve that is important, but how you achieve it. We love you with all our heart and soul. Honestly, there's no way to put into words the obvious pride we have in you.

Love, Mom and Mark (Sassy too)

Christina,

You've come to me with a lot of your problems; knowing that I'm your oldest sister, you thought I would have all the answers for you. I've always tried to help you, but it seems like you helped me more. You're my little sis, the baby of the family. We wish you the best on your journey in becoming a young woman, and pursuing your goals. We love you always.

Love, Tracy, Brian,
Christopher & Brittany

Christina,

You are my baby sister and you grew up to be a beautiful woman. You are accomplishing what some people only dream of doing. That is going to college and following through with your dreams. Keep reaching for the stars and don't do what anyone expects you to do; do what makes you happy. Good luck with everything. We love you!

Love, Tammy, Dave, Cecelia,
Margaret & Kaytlyn

In Loving Memory, Our Angel
From Above...
Zachary Allan Smith
You're in my heart always.

Christina,

We have gotten really close the past five years. Going through high school with you was a lot of fun. When you leave for college, we'll miss you so much. We stand behind you in everything you do. We know your dreams will come true! We love you.. Good Luck!
Love, Sabrina, Brad & Katherine

Christina,

You are my youngest sister who accomplished a lot. You set your mind to do something and you always go for it. You would be (you are) the one out of all of us to do that. You are my sister and my best friend. Good luck with all you do. We love you.

Love, Susan, Jim & Shawn

The years have gone by so fast.
Although I still remember the past.
Now you may be a little wild
And Mom's only "golden" child
But I love you still the same
And everyone will remember your name
Cuz we be gettin' rowdy rowdy
And tell them all "Don't mess with Staudty."
Have lots of fun & celebration
And good luck on your graduation.
With lots of love,
Your brother Harold

Christina,

You are my youngest sister and my brightest sister. You are the only one of seven Staudts who wants to go to college. You have a lot of ambition and will to succeed in life. No matter what happens in your life, we will all know you will accomplish all your dreams. "Christina, I wish you all the luck in the world and you know I'll support you in everything you do!" We all love you... Good Luck!

Love, Tabitha, Dave, Zachary & Joseph

SENIOR FAREWELLS

I can't finally believe this is over! After four years of this place I had to often call my home. This yearbook office has given me the experiences that I would never have had anywhere else. I have grown to have some of my closest friends and memories.

Nikki- You have grown to become one of my best friends in the whole world. The darkroom became the out for us to talk and share all of our many high school problems. You will always be my ketchup chica. Thanks for all the rice and beans you have brought to me on my many stressed yearbook days. I love you. Tom- What can I say? We have shared in some wonderful times through the years you were in yearbook... Harrisburg. Need I say more? You were always here to pick on me and tell me I whined way too much. But, I'm sure once it's over I'll miss ya'. You're the true wanna-be EIC. Chad- Well, there aren't words to describe the memories we have shared over the years. This year has been a blast and you have come along with the sports section. Rae- Once again the all famous yearbook question... Is it typeface or font? Bilal, I have to thank you for all your smart comments; it has kept me on my toes and alert. Mrs. Bocian, Where can I even begin? We went from being teacher and student in 8th and 9th grade and over the years you have grown into a great friend. I was always able to count on you for any advice I ever needed. I will never forget what you have taught me over the many years. I love you. One last ode to my fellow yearbookers from the past... Feel the love, Denise

I can't believe how fast the times have gone by, and it's hard to believe that I have to say goodbye. But, there have been some good memories. Denise- W/out YB I probably never would've met someone who understands & loves me exactly the way I am! The darkroom has been an ultimate escape for us. Oh my, if those black walls could talk! You taught me my way around the darkroom. You are the stars of my sky & the ketchup for my fries! Chad- We managed to make peace & become exceptionally good friends. Dalia- We've had some great times. Just remember not to pull all your hair out! Good luck, my little Colombian Bean! Mrs. Bocian- It's been a long 3 years. For all the gray hairs we gave you, I hope we gave you twice as many laughs & smiles. 3 years of yearbook have definitely made a Husky print in my heart forever. Jessi- You're one of the kindest people, pass on my darkroom knowledge & don't ever forget me b/c I'll RUA! Peace, Love Nikki

Wow, three years of writing last minute articles, cropping people's heads off, stressing deadlines, surviving after-school hours, and finally, doing and redoing a senior section which almost made me pull my hair out! Yet, it was all worth it, for it was three years of fun and yearbook love. Rachael, where did all our food go? Nikki, do we have another guy story to share? Chad, I am sorry for all the bad love advice I gave you. Thanks for always making me smile. Bilal, I know I still have to wash your car. And, last but not least, Mrs. Bocian, thanks for leading me in the steps of a journalist and calling me Dalia Dahling! Dalia

Where should I start? Chad we've known each other forever and we have a lot of great memories. Good luck in everything you do in the future. Tom, all I can say is I'm really gonna miss you. Keep your good humor. Dalia, you're a great person and friend. Don't ever change. Cindy, keep working hard; don't change your ways; it will get you somewhere. Nikki, good luck in the future with guys and everything else. Denise, we had ups and downs, but we made it. Good luck in college. Bilal, you're very smart and a nice person. Jessenia, take control next year. Matt, you're a great person; hope you make it through next year by yourself. Camilla, what are you gonna do with out me? Lauren, I've known you forever; good luck in your future career. Rae, I'm really gonna miss you; thanks for everything. I almost forgot Mrs. Bocian! Thanks for everything! Good Luck! Love, Angela

It's over already?! Yeah, hard to believe, huh? All those endless nights in the office were well worth it. It was an incredible experience which made me grow in many ways. I'd like to thank everyone in yearbook, especially Denise because she poured her heart into it and that's what it is all about. I wish everyone luck in the future! Ciao, Lauren

Mrs. B...I can't imagine yearbook without you. I thought you had the mall rats picture...another late night, what time are we going to be here till tonight? Denise...we've known each other forever... I could always count on you to be a friend. Nikki... remember our talks over lunch in the yearbook office. Chad...can you number these pictures please? I won't have anyone to call me "CP." Tom...you were the one we could always count on for laughs...you and Chad did an awesome job on sports. Rachael...look there's something falling from the sky...never forget the fun times we had 4th period...no, you can't use this table, I'm using it. Angela...Sorry you can't use that pic for fashion. Jerome...you coming for after hours...no, there's no food for you today. Jen...Big Dawg...how's the Balance bar? Chrystanee(haha)...just tell them it's not Christie (Mrs.K) or Chrystanee...what's wrong with your pictures now? Dalia...It has gone so fast...thanks for all the help. Lauren...what do you want now, a cup of soup? Bilal...you are such a pain...you always have a comment for everything...well,at least you finished the year without losing an eye. Good Luck. HUSKY PRIDE!! Luv, Cindy!

Is this really it? The end is finally here? I can't believe it. Another year, another book. This is my Husky class, the class of '01, except my seniors are leaving me while I remain. Oh, how I will miss all of you. It has truly been a pleasure. Four years ago we came from middle school, and your graduation was definitely closer than it had appeared. Chrystanee, with an "I"; Jenn, the creative genius; and Angela, my quietest editor...we've had a good year - thank you for your hard work. Jerome, the photoshop master, your skills came in handy many, many times. Lauren, my lunch buddy, always follow your instincts... they're good. Rachael, stick to those ideals; I've always admired that determination. Bilal, I will fondly miss those oh-so quiet one-liners. Dalia-Dahling...you are too sweet; enjoy my alma mater, GO LIONS! Nik, my silent observer, and so efficient in that darkroom, you always made it seem so effortless. Cindy, we've endured four-years together in this crazy class called yearbook...and that underclassmen section...AAARGH! Chad, how will I survive next year not hearing... "I can't eat till tomorrow"? You have to be one of the most loyal human beings I have ever met. OK, Leauber, what's to say? You've been there for what seemed like forever, and your presence was always noticed. You are unique and unforgettable...I'll miss my morning dose of "The World According to Leauber." Denise, Denise...don't leave me! How will I function without you? You are a born leader, smart and full of energy and initiative. When you're working in the publishing world in NYC, you better send a limo for me to come visit you. I will miss you, my student and friend. Finally, to all my seniors: "Live simply, know thy self, and seek truth." (Thoreau) But, most of all, never forget our little yearbook motto, for you all will be forever loved and remembered by me. FTL. Mrs. Bocian

After working with the same people, in the same office, for countless hours, working together for the same cause you begin to form special bonds with people. I could ramble on forever about my Yearbook memories, because they are countless. Every one of you guys has a special quality that makes you who you are. I could take this space to tell you all what they are, but I'll make it interesting and you guys can find out for yourself. I want to let you all know that in my heart I will remember you all, whether its standing in the Shakespearean garden taking a picture acting like clowns, or the crazy night we spent in Harrisburg, you won't be forgotten. No matter where you end up in life, no matter what you do, be sure to always keep in touch. The bonds we've formed are very special, and I believe they will never be broken. Tom

Yearbook "Feel the Love". Mrs. Bocian you have been there to guide me through my good and bad times. THANK YOU!!! I will look at every challenge as a "quest for points." Denise, my editor-in-chief, thanks for all the guidance, loads of laughs. (Font VIP) and for always understanding me. Tom and Chad, sports and deadline heroes, you've made YB interesting....Tom,

AKA Ghettofabulous, your bold opinions have keep me up to date on the world from your point of view. Ang, we have been good friends since we were like 6. We've had our times in and outside of school. Do the words boys, T.R., skip and 4th mean anything to you? Don't forget I've always and forever will be here. Dalia, do you think we ate enough 3rd Pd? YB office = junk food. Dalia darling I will miss you and hope we K.I.T. Bilal (enough with the jokes) and Jerome thanks for letting me be apart of your select group. Lauren good looking out with the food. Cindy keep smiling. Nikki (burp) strive for the best in all you do. Rachael

"There's no food today?!" "Who's bringing in snacks tomorrow?" "Guys, I'm hungry!" Well, everyone, it's been real. It was really stressful when deadlines drew near. If only we didn't procrastinate... Yeah, OK, it's like a way of life! But, of course, all of the hard work and hair-pulling was worth it. I think this is the best book yet, and for our senior year! Chrystanee (ha), thanks for working on everything with me... and basically putting up with me. I love ya! Jerome, you have a one-of-a-kind sense of humor! Bilal, you and your smart-butt comments! You are the man. Chad, just grow! LOL! Denise, you are such a hard worker! You'll go far in life. Matt, put the stapler down! That's so mean! Cindy, keep smiling! Mrs. B, thanks for putting up with Chrystanee and me and all of our questions! And, thanks for figuring out how to fix our Snowball layout! We all sure did put together a heckuva book. Good luck everyone on everything you do! Love, Just Jen w/ just one "n"

This year's been fun, more fun than sleeping on the sun. All the late nights we spent chillin' have come and gone more than Bob Dylan. I will miss everyone and their shining faces. I hope you all see many fun and interesting places. I will miss you all. I hope we all meet again in the end. Peace Out. Jerome

Mrs. Bocian- I've been writing articles for yearbook since my freshman year and I'm still making spelling mistakes. Leauber- I don't care what anyone says, our sports are hot. We work great together. Our 3-D idea has to be the greatest idea in yearbook history. No one will be able to replace your genius layout or how you picked on everyone. Nikki- We have shared some great times that I'll never forget. Thanks for all the advice you always gave me... that I never listened to...and thanks for teaching me that you only live once and to reach for what I want. Denise- Well, you're my EIC in school and out of school. I hope you reach your goal of working for People magazine b/c you have the talent...stock up on red pens in college; you might find someone who spells as bad as me. Chad

CHRISTYNEE...not Chrystanee, look at the sign Jen made! Jen, I don't know what I would've done without you; I don't think I would've survived... Chad, can I take these? Why not? Bilal, if not for your smart comments, I don't know what I would have done to pass time. Denise, I think we did more complaining about school than actual work. Never trust Matt with a stapler or a pencil. Mrs. B, thanks for letting Jen and me "split" everything... Shhh! Remember, what ever goes on in yearbook stays within our little office. Christynee

I want to wish all my yearbook friends the best. Jerome, the only one who got my jokes, and to the rest of the yearbookers who were the object of them. SIKE. Everyone is great and will be successful in their endeavors. Bilal

CLOSER THAN IT APPEARED

As another year at Dieruff High came to a close, the students and faculty reminisced about a great year. The girls basketball team went to the District II playoffs; records were broken: Mrs. Sabo led her Husky team of teachers in preparing for the yearly PSSA testing; and the junior class spiced up the cafeteria for the first annual Sweetheart dance. The start of high school for freshmen and the close of four great years for the seniors was all Closer Than it Had Appeared.

The school year brought just as many memories as it did hardships and heartaches. December 15, 2000 was also filled with upset faces and broken hearts. Students and faculty lost an instructor and friend with the passing of Harrison-Morton Middle School teacher Mr. Tim Kratzer.

Dieruff High School was never the same year after year. Everyone who walked through the doors of Husky High was always closer than he or she appeared to be heading off to college, joining the work force or the US Armed Forces, or starting their own path of adulthood. Dieruff was never the same year after year, which made this school one-of-a-kind.

Editor-in-Chief: Denise Penrose

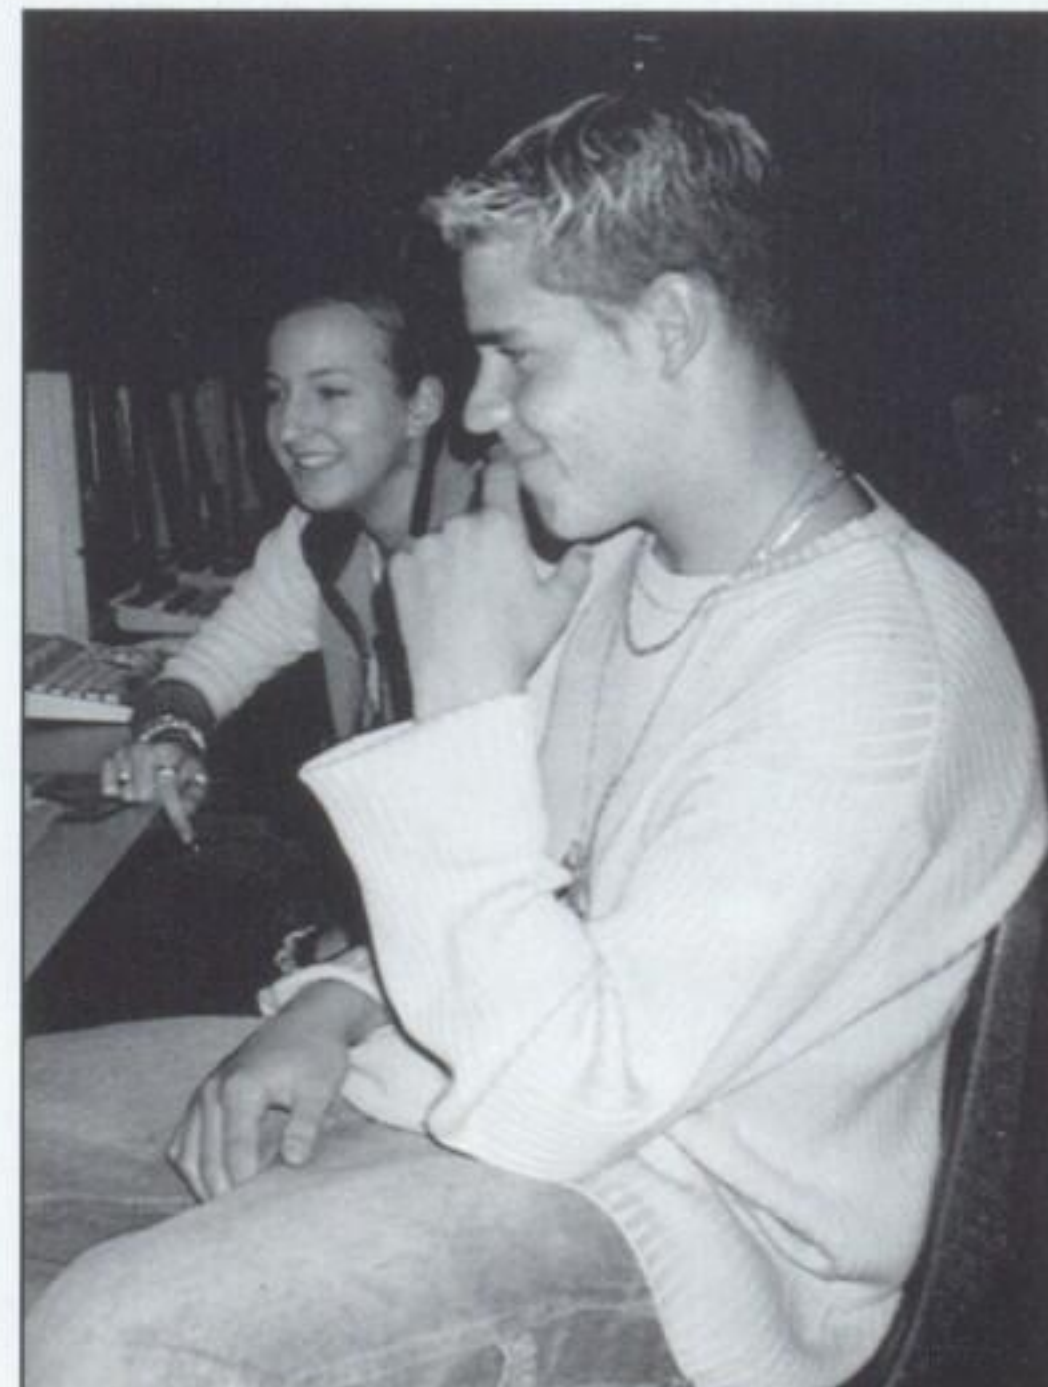

Kiska's Mom. Social Studies teacher, Mrs. Coleman, begins her lesson. Mrs. Coleman and her husband, a retired DHS faculty member, cared for the Lehigh Valley's only live school mascot, our very own and beloved Kiska.

Unforgettable. Teacher and "hall monitor," Mr. Riddick, proudly shows that even the enforcer can forget his ID. This was the first time in three years he forgot to bring his ID to school with him.

The Ledannus staff would like to acknowledge the fond memory of H-M math teacher and girls basketball coach Mr. Tim Kratzer, who left the children of Allentown too early in December of 2000.

Surfing Swiftly. Juniors Jason Jones and German exchange student Miriam Eggers use the library computer room to research their term paper.
